The 1992 fiscal year was an historic one for the National Gallery, with the retirement of J. Carter Brown as director and the arrival of Earl A. Powell III as his successor. "Rusty" Powell was the unanimous choice of a search committee headed by your president, with Robert H. Smith as vice chairman and Ruth C. Stevenson and Alexander M. Laughlin as members. The Board of Trustees pays tribute to Carter Brown for his remarkable leadership as director for 23 years, and we are grateful to have his continuing support in his new role as director emeritus. The Trustees also feel extremely fortunate and confident to have Rusty Powell take the helm at the Gallery. Rusty was an outstanding director of the Los Angeles County Museum of Art, and he comes to his new job already a longtime member of the Gallery family, through his prior tenure here during the 1970s.

Even amid the transition that accompanies a change of leadership, the Gallery holds fast to its mission: to serve the United States in a national role by preserving, collecting, exhibiting, and fostering understanding of works of art at the highest possible museum and scholarly standards. These are the uncompromising standards of quality for which the Gallery has been known since its founding.

The 1990s are challenging times for art museums, making it necessary to set forth clear priorities and goals. Such planning will enable the National Gallery to fulfill its mission, serve its national audience effectively, and make optimum use of its resources. Through a process of discussion and evaluation that has involved the National Gallery Trustees, Trustees' Council members, executive officers, and staff in all areas of operation, we are developing a plan that articulates the Gallery's programmatic priorities and goals for the balance of this decade, establishing what must be done to address critical needs, to maintain momentum, and to strengthen resources. The plan will identify a realistic budget, reconciling aspirations with available resources and focusing on the requirements of the Gallery's permanent collection, national service and outreach, educational and scholarly programs, and facilities. We look forward to completing this plan and beginning to act on it in the coming year.

A major accomplishment of the fiscal year was the completion of the reinstallation of the Gallery's collection throughout the main floor of the West Building. This two-year program involved complete reorganization of the Italian, Spanish, German, Flemish and Dutch, British, American, and French painting and sculpture collections. Nearly 1,000 objects were reorganized into approximately chronological order, shifting away from the previous arrangement that grouped artists by schools or nationality. Galleries were repainted, new lighting and labeling were added, and architectural elements were adapted to enhance the works of art. This reinstallant has enabled us to present the sweeping course of European and American art history in sharper focus.

and to illuminate relationships among artists working during the same period.

This year also witnessed the most wide-ranging temporary exhibition in the Gallery’s history: Circa 1492: Art in the Age of Exploration. On the eve of the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus’ voyage, Circa 1492 presented the artistic and cultural achievements of the major civilizations of the world during the late 15th and early 16th centuries. This broad exhibition brought together almost 600 paintings, sculptures, drawings, tapestries, works of decorative art, maps and scientific instruments from Europe and Africa, Asia and the Americas. Nearly half a million people visited Circa 1492, the sole venue of which was the National Gallery.

The National Gallery’s excellence and great achievements are the product of its staff and volunteer leadership. The Trustees work in a constructive partnership with the Gallery’s senior staff, with whom I confer on a regular basis. The Trustees also benefit greatly from the assistance and involvement of the Trustees’ Council, led by Edwin Cox and Lois de Menil. This year we welcome Calvin Cafritz from Washington, D.C., Doris Fisher from San Francisco, Julie Folger from Washington, D.C., and Camilla Chandler Frost from Los Angeles, as new members of the Trustees’ Council. Mrs. Fisher and Mrs. Frost will additionally serve on the Trustees’ Council development committee.

The National Gallery also owes its success to the dynamic combination of public and private forces that support it. We acknowledge with gratitude the continuing commitment of funds the Gallery receives from the federal government to provide for day-to-day operations. We were fortunate also this year to continue to enjoy tremendous private philanthropic support, sustaining the momentum of giving generated by last year’s 50th anniversary. In this fiscal year the Gallery received extraordinary gifts of art for its collections and generous gifts of funds for a range of programs and initiatives.

This year the Gallery served approximately 50 million people inside and outside its walls, through its exhibitions, programs, and extension services. In a time of renewed attention to national service, we are reminded of the continuing importance and relevance of a national gallery in our cultural life; the time-tested success of the public-private partnership; and of the exceptional vision of the Gallery’s founder, Andrew Mellon.

Message from the Director

It is an honor for me to have been chosen by the Board of Trustees as the new director of the National Gallery of Art. Andrew Mellon, with his extraordinary gift to the nation in 1937, inspired the growth of this great institution. He has been joined by magnanimous donors such as founding benefactors Samuel H. and Rush Kress, Joseph E. and Peter A.B. Widener, Chester Dale, Lessing Rosenwald, Paul Mellon, and Ailsa Mellon Bruce to create a truly national gallery that ranks with the finest museums in the world. I am delighted and proud to return to the National Gallery to serve as its director.

The chief strength of the National Gallery is its rich permanent collection. Major benefactions of entire collections as well as outstanding individual gifts from over 2,000 donors since the Gallery’s opening in 1941 have more than validated Andrew Mellon’s belief that a national gallery, holding to the highest standards in its collecting and programs, would attract and sustain national support. The Gallery will continue to foster an appreciation and understanding of art by emphasizing the particular distinctions of the collections and by supporting a wide range of educational and scholarly initiatives, conservation activities, exhibitions, and publications. Distribution of our educational resources to communities throughout the country will broaden our continuing service to the nation.

Another critical mission the National Gallery seeks to fulfill is the encouragement of understanding among nations through the sharing of our varied artistic heritages. As members of the international cultural community, museums play a significant role in this exchange and in the furthering of scholarship and ideas and the advancement of art education. As the United States’ ambassador of the arts to the rest of the world, the National Gallery will continue to facilitate the international exchange of art.

The Gallery’s first fifty years, under the inspired leadership of lifelong trustee and benefactor Paul Mellon and the first three directors, saw the establishment, development, and growth of a superb art institution, one that all in Washington and throughout the country have come to call their own. As the Gallery begins its next half century, the trustees, officers, and staff join me in our firm commitment to serve the people of the United States through the collecting, exhibiting, and preserving of great works of art.

The following review of the 1992 fiscal year, a momentous one in the history of the National Gallery, has been written by my predecessor, J. Carter Brown. I commend it to you and look forward to taking the nation’s art gallery into a similarly exciting and challenging future.

Earl A. Powell III
Director
The year represented by this report was an unusual one in many ways, perhaps particularly for the writer, whose last year it was at the National Gallery of Art. After 32 years here, the last 23 of them as director, the end of the fiscal year coincided with my retirement from the Gallery, a decision that involves many and mixed feelings, but that did not come without a certain sense of the Gallery being in good shape, with a brilliant successor in place.

The National Gallery received over 5,437,000 visits in fiscal year 1992. This represented a 7.6 percent increase over 1991.

The year was in many ways the year of the permanent collection. It came at the conclusion of the Gallery's 50th anniversary, and all aspects of the Gallery focused on the extraordinary collection that has come here over the years to represent the U.S.A. The entire permanent collection of paintings and sculpture was reinstalled, many new acquisitions were added, and almost all of the exhibitions had in some way to do with the Gallery's own holdings. The year also included the Columbus Quincentennial, which involved a heroic effort on the part of the Gallery staff in commemoration of that remarkable milestone in world history.

The reinstallation, which included 20th-century holdings in the East Building, was primarily a rethinking of the hanging and placement of all of the works of art on view on the main floor of the Gallery's West Building. Over 1,000 works of art were unhung and rehung or moved from their pedestals or walls, many several times. It was a major collaborative effort involving curatorial, design, conservation, education, and security staff. The Gallery's gifted deputy director, Roger Mandle, was the major instigator of the reinstallation as a 50th anniversary accomplishment, with critical support from Gaillard Ravenel, the chief of design, and Charles S. Moffett, then senior curator of paintings, assisted by relevant curators in each section of the display.

All of the Italian, Spanish, German, Flemish and Dutch, British, American, and French paintings and sculpture collections on the main floor were involved. The basic concept, of starting in Gallery 1 with our earliest paintings and moving counterclockwise around the building to illustrate the history of Western European and American painting and sculpture since the Middle Ages, remained intact. However, within the various sections, many adjustments were made, primarily to emphasize chronology over geography. For example, the early Italian galleries are no longer divided by city states, such as Florence and Siena, but integrated according to period, on the theory that some of those distinctions had been artificial—with, for example, Duccio in Siena working for Florentine patrons. Various artists who knew and were influenced by each other's works are now exhibited together. As another example, Poussin and Claude are now shown with their Italian contemporaries, in view of the major thrust of their work having been done in Rome rather than in France. Similarly, American painters who spent most of their productive years in England are now exhibited with their British colleagues. (This has made consistent the precedent that we had always observed of hanging Mary Cassatt with the French impressionists, or Picasso with the school of Paris, regardless of where they were born.)

Goya could be considered as a Spanish painter or as a seminal artist bridging the 18th and early 19th centuries. For the installation we chose the latter, and now he starts off the east half of the main floor and leads into the Gallery's superb 18th- and 19th-century holdings from France.

The experiment of grouping sculpture in a long series of contiguous galleries at the far west end of the main floor had not really succeeded, and the new installation allowed us to go back to the National Gallery's original concept of rooms of sculpture interspersed among the paintings galleries, providing intermittent visual contrast. We allowed for the first time some sculpture actually to appear in paintings galleries where it seemed particularly appropriate, as in Gallery 2 with the early Italians, or in the French galleries with Houdon's busts of Voltaire brought in to complement the 18th-century portrait paintings.

The design and installation staff also made Titian's only ceiling painting in America evoke its original setting in Venice, placing it in a room very close to the proportions of the one for which it had been painted, in an ingenious ceiling installation that grew out of the design for our Titian exhibition. The department was involved in all the visual aspects of installation, which resulted in the repainting of virtually all of the galleries, often with special glazes, and new lighting that blends natural and artificial light ranging from incandescent bulbs to high-tech fiber optics. Many period frames were purchased through the Ailsa Mellon Bruce Fund and The Circle of the National Gallery of Art, bringing new splendor to Leonardo's Ginevra de' Benci, which had recently been magnificently cleaned by David Bull of our conservation department. Every one of the works of art was relabeled. Labels were taken off the picture frames so as not to interfere visually with the frames, many of which are works of art in themselves, and so as to allow a more legible and informative format. New room graphics give a summary of the contents of each room as a further help to the visitor.

The reinstalling involved many new educational offerings. Laminated guides for each gallery are being prepared in English, French, German, Italian, Japanese, and Spanish, an ongoing project made possible by Knight Foundation. Twenty-three new guides in English and five sets of translations were completed this year. In addition, self-guided tours were prepared. The first of these, The Age of Lorenzo de' Medici, which was published in conjunction with the 500th anniversary of Lorenzo's death, takes visitors on a tour of the Gallery's collection of art from Renaissance Florence. A series of family guides supported by the Vira I. Heinz Endowment was also launched during the year, beginning with Portraits and Personalities, intended for children from age 8 to 10.

During the anniversary year the permanent collection grew with a very welcome avalanche of gifts and other splendid acquisitions, coordinated by Mellon Senior Curator Andrew Robison with the assistance of virtually every curator on the staff and the development office as well. In all, 2,444 works of art from 224 donors, representing 22 states and 5 foreign countries, rained in upon us. Some gifts involved private collections, such as the fabulous drawings from the Woodner family and the splendid selection of drawings from William B. O'Neal; and some specialized in the 20th century, such as the Vogels' extraordinary and adventurous collection. A full accounting of these acquisitions is made later in this report. Suffice it to say that sculpture was also included, with the beautiful large Rodin plaster given by Iris and B. Gerald Cantor, or the Houdon bust of George Washington from Robert McNeil.

Many of the acquisitions during the year combined a gift component with purchase from donated funds. The most spectacular was Monet’s The Japanese Footbridge, 1899, a partial bequest of Victoria Nebeker Coberly in memory of her son, John W. Mudd, combined with funds from Walter and Leonore Annenberg that made possible the acquisition. It is the Gallery’s first painting from Monet’s Giverny period, and after its cleaning the canvas has turned out to be one of the most beautiful of all Monet’s serial works. Also from Mrs. Coberly came an important early cubist Braque.

In sculpture, a Venus and Cupid was purchased through the combination of a generous gift from John and Henrietta Goelet and the Patrons’ Permanent Fund. This was the answer to a long-standing prayer that some day we would find a work of sculpture that could go in the fountain at the very center of the West Building’s ground floor, in the space directly under the Rotunda that is now occupied by our Garden Café. Visible from a great distance, announcing the splendid collection of bronzes and other sculpture to be found in the ground floor galleries, this seductive bronze has been re-plumbed by our conservation laboratory so that water again flows naturally off Venus’ tresses. A little cupid holds up a seashell to catch the water Venus is wringing from her hair, while a second jet arches out from the mouth of a dolphin.

The sculpture collection was also enormously enriched, with a view to our dream of an outdoor sculpture garden, by the acquisition of Miró’s Personnage Gothique–Oiseau-Éclair, made possible by the Morris and Gwendolyn Cafritz Foundation; other sculptures combining gift components came from George Rickey and the estate of Tony Smith. For the drawings collection, the Gallery was able to acquire, by means of the Patrons’ Permanent Fund, a two-sided sheet from Vasari’s book of drawings once owned by the Duke of Devonshire that contains ten Florentine old master drawings of the greatest rarity, including examples by Botticelli and Filippino Lippi, and, in addition, the great Benvenuto Cellini drawing of a Satyr, both from the Woodner Family Collection.

The permanent collection was also involved in many of our exhibitions. Our tradition of “focus” exhibitions was continued with a special grouping built around the Gallery’s Saint Anne Altarpiece by Gerard David, reuniting for the first time in ninety years our work with its various predella panels and serving as the basis of a scholarly symposium. Walker Evans photographs, Callot prints, and many of the drawings, prints, and photographs acquired during the year made celebrations of the permanent collection an integral part of our exhibition program. Even shows like those devoted to Käthe Kollwitz and Kirchner involved Gallery holdings and promised gifts. One painting that had been a star of the 50th anniversary gifts exhibition was also featured in the monographic show devoted to the work of Albert Bierstadt. The long-lost Lake Lucerne, given to the Gallery by Richard Scaife and Margaret Battle, had been rediscovered in the course of the preparations for this exhibition, co-organized by the Brooklyn Museum and the National Gallery, and had been acquired for the Gallery at a small auction in Rhode Island and cleaned by Ross Merrill. Its conservation kept it out of the previous venues, but when the exhibition opened in Washington, this large-scale, linchpin picture, foreshadowing the artist's vision of Western American grandeur, could take its rightful place in Bierstadt's oeuvre.

Recent acquisitions by the Gallery were also part of the Guercino exhibition, the painting show organized by Bologna on the 400th anniversary of Guercino's birth. We were able to arrange the scheduling of a beautiful exhibition of Guercino drawings from Windsor Castle to coincide, so that these two shows, each of which were also seen elsewhere, came together only in Washington for a major Guercino celebration.

Some of our exhibitions were, of course, without any involvement of the Gallery's permanent collection, although they related to it either by analogy or contrast. Sargent's "El Jaleo" gave us the opportunity to see the newly cleaned masterpiece from the Gardner Museum in Boston, its first time away, in a theatrical focus exhibition of great scholarly and public interest. In connection with the Columbus Quincentennial, the Art of the American Indian Frontier was beautifully installed in the East Building to reflect the collecting of Milford Chandler and Richard Pohrt, in a celebration of the artistic contributions of native Americans, and in anticipation of the major new neighbor we shall receive across the Mall when the Heye Collection of indigenous art of this hemisphere is enunced in the capital.

The principal Quincentennial undertaking was, of course, the exhibition Circa 1492: Art in the Age of Exploration. It built on one of the Gallery's major strengths, its collections of Italian Renaissance art, which at one point we had considered transferring into relevant sections of the show on a large scale. Finally, however, rather than mar the beautiful new reinstallation in the West Building, we decided it wiser to suggest that visitors look at our permanent holdings with the lessons of the 1492 show in mind.

One of the most complex exhibitions this museum or perhaps any other has ever undertaken, Circa 1492 took visitors on a worldwide voyage of discovery, "horizontally," as it were, around the principal world cultures of the late 15th and early 16th centuries, a time that changed forever the world's perceptions of itself. The theme was globalization, and the exhibition was, in fact, made possible by a global consortium of sponsors, in addition to a special appropriation from the U.S. Congress. The exhibition was presented in three sections—"Europe and the Mediterranean World," "Toward Cathay," and "The Americas"—and the response of visitors was most encouraging, as they found their eyes being opened to the extraordinary creativity around the world at this moment in history. Jay Levenson, a former Finley Fellow at the Gallery, gave up his legal career to return to his original field of specialization and be the guest curator of the show, building upon the early conceptual work that Sydney Freedberg established while still here as chief curator. Dr. Levenson headed a team of some 30 scholars who drew up the lists and wrote the catalogue entries for loans that involved fully 33 countries. The negotiations for loans proved long and arduous, but the results were rewarding.

Highlights of the more than 600 objects in the show included the large Bosch Temptation of Saint Anthony from Lisbon; Leonardo's exquisite Portrait of a Lady with an Ermine (Cecilia Gallerani), c. 1490, Czartoryski Museum, Cracow; Albrecht Dürer, Rhinoceros, 1515, Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York; Schleswefelder Schiff, 1503, Germanisches Nationalmuseum, Nuremberg.

logue and many guest lectures made the show a significant source for the increase of knowledge of this seminal epoch.

The Gallery’s educational program in connection with Circa 1492 included the production of a film, Masters of Illusion, which included dazzling special effects made possible by the latest advances in imaging technology, and traced the origins and development of perspective as one of the great contributions of the Renaissance. It not only was broadcast on PBS but was shown daily at the Gallery to capacity crowds in the auditorium and also in a new high-definition video theater, the first such theater in Washington. Brochures describing highlights of the exhibition were available in six languages: French, German, Italian, Japanese, and Spanish, as well as English. A special printed guide was produced for children ages 6 through 12, and there were two recorded tours, one for adults and one for children. Teaching packets, evenings with educators, and high school days for local students rounded out the educational efforts. In addition, there was a concert of early music from Spain and the Americas, and a recital of Iberian songs organized by the music office.
For the opening days, we were honored by the visit of the King and Queen of Spain, and also by the President of the Italian Senate, Giovanni Spadolini, himself a Renaissance scholar and the founding minister of cultural patrimony in Italy, as well as President and Mrs. Bush. To close the show, the President of Portugal, Mario Soares, made a special trip to Washington.

Scholarship proceeded at the Gallery in other connections as well. Our Center for Advanced Study in the Visual Arts conducted an active program of seminars, colloquia, and workshops, including a major symposium on "The Formation of National Collections of Art and Archaeology." Curatorial research continued, with important progress made on the multi-volume systematic catalogue, allowing us to anticipate publication of the volumes on German, British, and American naive paintings and part of the decorative arts collection in fiscal year 1993. A new summary catalogue of American paintings in the collection appeared, and preparation was completed for a summary catalogue of sculpture. The Gallery also joined in partnership with the Georgia O'Keeffe Foundation to begin preparation of a catalogue raisonné of the works of that artist, which will result over the next four years in a multi-volume publication.

Research continued in the conservation department, with work completed on the first issue of a new publication, Conservation Research, to appear in 1993. The department was also host to an international video conference on Saint Porchaire ceramics, applying technology provided by GTE ImageSpan that allowed for simultaneous viewing of high-resolution digitized images and live discussion among the participating scholars at the Louvre in Paris, the Victoria & Albert Museum in London, and our own National Gallery in Washington.

Great progress was made in implementing our new computerized collection management system, which tracks locations, loans, gifts, and research on artists and works of art in the collection. By year end, the system contained provenance, exhibition histories, and literature for more than 1,000 works of art, biographies and bibliographies for more than 200 artists, and basic cataloguing information for more than 73,000 works of art in the National Gallery collections, including the Index of American Design. This system is one of the most advanced of any art museum.

Technology played a major role in several educational initiatives. The Gallery had in 1980 been the first to bring videodiscs to the museum world, and work proceeded briskly over the past year on a new project. It combines videodisc technology with computer-based digital imaging techniques, the first time these two disparate technologies have ever been wedded together. The result will be a videodisc of all 2,600 objects in the Gallery's various American holdings, with 2,500 videodiscs to be distributed free, on a competitive basis, to schools and educational institutions in all 50 states as part of the 50th anniversary observance, all thanks to the generosity of the Annenberg Foundation.

Work also proceeded on adapting an interactive computer program called "Perseus," developed by Harvard University for the study of ancient Greek art, culture, and history, for use in our Greek Miracle exhibition. For this exhibition, as for the forthcoming exhibition from the Barnes Foundation, active negotiations and preparations progressed throughout the year.

In addition, the Gallery's national outreach continued with publication of Teacher Programs in Art Museums, a directory listing resources for teachers available at more than 260 museums across the nation; this was published by the Gallery with the support of The Baum Foundation and The Circle. The National Teacher Institute focused on Renaissance art for the second year in a row, responding to interest stirred up by the Columbus Quincentennial. The institute, now in its fourth year, adopts an interdisciplinary approach designed to help teachers in different fields incorporate the teaching of art into their curricula. Participants this year came from more than 30 states; some 650 educators from every state and the U.S. territories have now attended the institute since its inception.

Meanwhile, maintenance, repair, and renovation proceeded on our magnificent physical plant, which is nonetheless getting older. Preparations have commenced in earnest for the replacement of 3.5 acres of skylights and roofing and 40,000 square feet of laylights over the main level galleries and public areas of the West Building. Work has gone forward this year to improve access, facilities, and graphics for visitors with disabilities, with plans drawn up for permanent stone ramps at the 6th Street and Constitution Avenue entrance to the West Building. Technical specialists have continued work on major enhancements to the security system, and plans have also been developed for automation of the building operating system to improve the climate control for works of art. In addition, with jurisdiction over the future site of the sculpture garden now assumed by the National Gallery, we have taken steps this year to upgrade the existing landscape and to preserve the two concentric rings of linden trees that surround the pool and skating rink.

It was, finally, a year of changes in personnel. We were flattered when our senior curator of paintings and curator of modern European painting, Charles Moffett, was selected to become the first non-family director of the Phillips Collection, and again when our curator of 20th-century art, Jack Cowart, was made chief curator and deputy director of the newly revitalized Corcoran Gallery of Art.

My own retirement has brought home to me the extraordinary privilege of having worked at this institution. Everyone connected with it is inspired by the quality of its art; but beyond that, from the vantage of my fourth decade here, it has been enormously rewarding to work with and meet so many wonderful people who share one’s passion for our visual heritage. Paul Mellon, as trustee and as president and chairman of the Board of Trustees, and now an honorary trustee who makes a point of coming to the meetings, has been a very special factor in my life. I cherish in particular the opportunity to have worked with him on the building committee of the East Building, which he and his sister and their foundation made possible. Dr. Franklin Murphy, as a trustee from very shortly after I arrived at the Gallery, and currently as its gifted chairman, has also been a mentor and role model of enormous influence. I cannot begin to list all the others, the many trustees, the talented curators, design and other staff, including so many friends on the guard force, who have meant so much. I would like in particular to single out the team of executive officers who made life so collegial and effective in this final year: deputy director Roger Mandle, treasurer Daniel Herrick, secretary and general counsel Philip Jessup, administrator Anne Evans, dean of CASVA Henry Millon, and external affairs officer Joseph Krakora. Any accomplishments listed in this report have been primarily their work and that of their dedicated staffs.

When we invited Earl A. Powell III to leave the University of Texas in Austin in 1976 and work at the Gallery, his performance here as executive curator during the high-pressure days of organizing the Tutankhamun exhibition and opening the East Building earned him the admiration and affection of all with whom he came in contact. We were sorry to see him leave but understood the distinction of his appointment as director of the Los Angeles County Museum, which he has handled with such éclat. When the trustees’ search committee recommended and the board at their May meeting elected Rusty to become the new director, it was the greatest pleasure to be welcoming him back to National Gallery of Art. I know it could not now be in better hands.

Renaissance Paintings

In addition to finishing the comprehensive reinstallation of the Renaissance galleries this year, the department coordinated preparation of a brochure in honor of the 500th anniversary of the death of Lorenzo de' Medici (1449–1492), one of the most celebrated art patrons and collectors of all time. The booklet leads visitors on a tour of works of art in the collection that were created in Renaissance Florence, all of which relate in some way to Lorenzo. Among the highlights of the tour is the Adoration of the Magi tondo by Fra Angelico and Fra Filippo Lippi, which was the most prized painting in Lorenzo’s possession.

Two events this year featured the northern Renaissance master Gerard David’s Saint Anne Altarpiece. First, the three large panels were splendidly restored, reframed, and returned to public view in conjunction with the reinstallation of the permanent collection. Second, a small “focus” exhibition based on the altarpiece brought together for the first time since around 1902 predella panels belonging to the National Galleries of Scotland and the Toledo Museum of Art as well as a painting from the Art Institute of Chicago that may also have been part of the ensemble. Information about subject, provenance, and technique was presented on wall panels alongside photographic representations of hypothetical reconstructions. Thanks to the generosity of The Circle of the National Gallery of Art, an illustrated brochure accompanied the exhibition. The Saint Anne Altarpiece exhibition also provided a focal point for a Forum on Connoisseurship and Collecting, addressed by the curator of northern Renaissance painting and the conservator of the altarpiece.

In the absence of both the curator and the assistant curator of Italian Renaissance painting for part of the year, Alessandra Galizzi, former David E. Finley Fellow at the Center for Advanced Study in the Visual Arts, served as the Mellon assistant curator.

Baroque Paintings

A number of important acquisitions this year added new dimensions to the Gallery’s collection of northern baroque paintings. Foremost among these was Paul Mellon’s generous gift of six Dutch and Flemish still lifes, including Jan Brueghel the Elder's A Basket of Mixed Flowers and a Vase of Flowers, dated 1615, given in honor of the Gallery’s 50th anniversary. The other paintings that comprised this gift were two small and minutely detailed pendants by Barthasar van der Ast, Basket of Fruits and Basket of Flowers; A Hanging Bouquet of Flowers by Abraham Mignon; Jan Philips van Thielen's Roses and Tulips and Jasmine in a Glass with a Dragonfly and a Butterfly; and finally, Vase of Flowers in a Niche, a panel attributed to Abraham
Two paintings by David Teniers the Younger were also added to the collections this year: Peasants in a Tavern, a gift from Mr. and Mrs. John Ely Pfieger; and Two Peasants with a Glass of Wine, a partial and promised gift from Mrs. Robert W. Weidenhammer. Both of these delightful images of peasant merrymakers demonstrate Teniers' characteristically fluid brushwork and his genius for expression. Their addition brings to four the number of paintings by Teniers at the Gallery.

Several long-term loans to the National Gallery have complemented our collection of baroque paintings: Emile E. Wolf has lent an important Rembrandt school work, The Levite at Gibeah by Gerbrandt van den Eeckhout; David E. Rust has lent Hendrick Ter Bruggen's The Mocking of Christ, a promised gift to the Gallery; the Cincinnati Art Museum lent Portrait of a Man in Armor by Anthony van Dyck, David with the Head of Goliath by Bernardo Strozzi, The Pardon of Saint John Chrysostom by Mattia Preti, and Saint Peter Nolasco Recovering the Image of the Virgin by Francisco Zurbarán; Guido Reni's Saint Jerome was on loan from the Detroit Institute of Arts; Juan van der Hamen's Still Life with Fruit and Glassware from the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston; Hubert Robert's Fountain from the Kimbell Art Museum, Fort Worth; and Bernardo Bellotto's recently conserved Piazza, the Fortress of Sonnenstein from a private collector.

The curator of southern baroque painting and guest curator Sir Denis Mahon helped organize the exhibition Guercino.
Master Painter of the Baroque, joining the Pinacoteca Nazionale, Bologna, and the Schirn Kunsthalle, Frankfurt, to commemorate the 400th anniversary of the birth of Giovanni Francesco Barbieri, called “Guerino” (1591–1666). This exhibition was funded by the Florence Gould Foundation. Among the 59 paintings on view were masterpieces from all periods of the artist’s career, including The Martyrdom of Saint Peter from the Galleria Estense, Modena, Saint William Receives the Monastic Habit from the Pinacoteca Nazionale in Bologna, and The Intervention of the Sabine Women from the Louvre. In connection with this exhibition, the Gallery presented a one-day seminar in the galleries for specialists and graduate students, cosponsored a two-day public symposium with the Delaware Art Museum, and offered three lectures by Mellon assistant curator Peter Lukehart.

The exhibition Emblemata and Dutch Art, shown in the National Gallery library and drawn from the Gallery’s rare book collection of 17th-century Dutch volumes, examined the character of emblems as well as the relationship of emblematic images to various Dutch paintings in the collection. The show was organized by students in a seminar at the Folger Institute, offered in conjunction with the University of Maryland under the guidance of the Gallery’s curator of northern baroque painting.

Work has progressed rapidly on the systematic catalogue of 17th- and 18th-century Italian paintings in the collections. Research and important technical examinations have resulted in several reattributions, the most interesting of which is Saint Cecilia and an Angel, now known to have been painted by Orazio Gentileschi and Giovanni Lanfranco. Research and writing also continued on the systematic catalogues of Dutch and Flemish paintings in the collection, with the manuscript for the Dutch volume very near completion. Research undertaken with the assistance of paintings conservators has brought to light new information regarding the Gallery’s paintings by Rembrandt and his followers. One consequence of this research is the reattribution of A Girl with a Broom to Carel Fabritius, a native of Delft and one of the more talented students working in the Rembrandt studio in Amsterdam in the 1640s. Apparently Fabritius began this work around 1646–1648 but left it unfinished; the painting was then completed by an unknown member of Rembrandt’s workshop in 1651.

American and British Paintings

This year was distinguished by four acquisitions that significantly enhance the Gallery’s American paintings collection. The earliest of these is John Singleton Copley’s Sketch for the Copley Family, a gift from Richard T. York in honor of the Gallery’s 50th anniversary. This is a particularly welcome acquisition, for it reunites the sketch with the finished painting, already in our collection, for the first time since the two works left Copley’s studio over 200 years ago. Fitz Hugh Lane’s serenely radiant Becalmed off Halfway Rock was a gift from Paul Mellon, also in honor of the Gallery’s anniversary. It is the second unsurpassed work by this key American marine painter in the Gallery’s collection. Two vibrantly painted works from the early years of the 20th century were also acquired: John Singer Sargent’s Valdemosas, Majorca: Thistles and Herbage on a Hillside, and Frank Weston Benson’s portrait of Margaret (“Gretchen”) Strong, the former from the Avalon Fund and Virginia Bailey Brown, and the latter a gift of Elizabeth Clarke Hayes.

The National Gallery presented two exhibitions of American painting this year. Albert Bierstadt: Art & Enterprise, co-organized by the Gallery and the Brooklyn Museum, brought together 72 works for a full-scale examination of this great master of landscape painting. John Singer Sargent’s “El Jaleo,” in contrast, was a small “focus” exhibition devoted to a single work, the artist’s 1882 masterpiece depicting the spirited performance of a Spanish dance. El Jaleo, never before lent by the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum in Boston, had recently undergone comprehensive conservation treatment and was shown with the many drawings, sketches, and related paintings made by Sargent in the process of its creation.

Research on the American and British collections made important advances. The systematic catalogues of British paintings, by John Hayes, director of the National Portrait Gallery, London, and of American naive paintings were both brought to the final stages of publication. Work continued on the catalogue of 18th-century American paintings and the first volume of 19th-century academic works, with both manuscripts nearing completion. A new summary catalogue of American paintings in the Gallery’s collection, now numbering some 1,400 examples, was published, replacing the 1980 edition. Preparations progressed for a “focus” exhibition on Copley’s Watson and the Shark and for major retrospective exhibitions of the works of Winslow Homer and James McNeill Whistler.

Modern Paintings

The National Gallery of Art this year acquired a major painting by Claude Monet, The Japanese Footbridge, a joint gift of Victoria Nebeker Coberly, in memory of her son John W. Mudd, and of Walter H. and Leonore Annenberg. Painted in Monet’s garden at Giverny, this canvas is one of the most important and beautiful in the Japanese Footbridge series, which led directly to the renowned Waterlilies series from the last decades of the artist’s career.

The most significant project of the department has been the organization of the exhibition Great French Paintings from The Barnes Foundation: Impressionist, Post-Impressionist, and Early Modern, which will open at the National Gallery in May 1993. At the request of the Barnes Foundation, the Gallery assembled a team of French and American curators and scholars, who selected 80 works for exhibition from the collection formed by the late Dr. Albert C. Barnes. In addition to paintings by Renoir, Cézanne, and Matisse, who are especially well represented in the collection, the show will include works by Manet, Monet, Van Gogh, Gauguin, Henri Rousseau, Seurat, Toulouse-Lautrec, and Picasso, among others. Co-organized by the National Gallery and the Barnes Foundation in Merion, Pennsylvania, the exhibition will travel to the Musée d’Orsay, Paris, the Museum of Western Art in Tokyo, and the Philadelphia Museum of Art. The international tour will coincide with renovation of the Paul Cret building in which the foundation’s collection is housed.

The department also selected objects and prepared catalogue entries for two exchange exhibitions. For one, 35 of the National Gallery’s impressionist and post-impressionist paintings and 35 of the Metropolitan Museum of Art’s old master paintings will travel to Greece for an exhibition scheduled to coincide with showings of The Greek Miracle: Classical Sculpture from the Dawn of Democracy; the Fifth Century B.C. at the Gallery and the Metropolitan, to which the Greek Ministry of Culture is lending many extraordinary works of art. Then in appreciation for generous loans from the Portuguese Ministry of Culture to our exhibition Circa 1492: Art in the Age of Exploration, the Gallery will lend 40 of its 19th- and 20th-century paintings to the Centro Cultural de Belem in Lisbon. Progress continued on the systematic catalogue of 19th-century European paintings. Significant progress was also made in preparation for several longer-term exhibitions, the Adolph Menzel and Édouard Vuillard retrospectives and Still-Life Painting in France: 1848-1914.

Charles S. Moffett, senior curator of paintings and curator of modern painting, left the Gallery in September to become director of the Phillips Collection, Washington. Elizabeth P. Streicher, associate research curator, serves as acting head of the department.

20th-Century Art

The continued generosity of donors in the completion of the National Gallery’s 50th anniversary campaign brought to the collection important gifts of 20th-century art. Of special note were the two classic Mark Rothko paintings received from Paul Mellon, the large Anthony Caro sculpture Scheherazade from Guido Goldman, two powerful paintings by Alice Neel from Arthur M. Bullowa, a striking cedar block sculpture by Carl Andre as a partial and promised gift of Agnes Gund and Daniel Shapiro, and a seminal early circular wooden wall piece by Martin Puryear from Carolyn Small Alper.

In addition, the first gifts and partial purchases from the internationally renowned Dorothy and Herbert Vogel Collection of minimal and conceptual art came to the Gallery this year. Selected from a collection of more than 2,000 paintings, drawings, and sculpture by more than 200 contemporary artists, this year’s transfer comprised 214 works by 11 major artists: Carl Andre, Richard Artschwager, Lynda Benglis, John Cage, Christo, Donald Judd, Sol LeWitt, Robert Mangold, Sylvia Mangold, Joel Shapiro, and Richard Tuttle. Another significant group of 100 drawings by still other artists was formally pledged. These gifts and pledges initiated the planned transfer of the entire Vogel Collection to the National Gallery, which will make this extraordinary resource accessible to the public and scholars.

The Robert and Jane Meyerhoff Collection at the Gallery was further enhanced by the Meyerhoffs’ donation of major modern and contemporary paintings by Josef Albers, Eric Fischl, Agnes Martin, Ad Reinhardt, and Frank Stella, a sculpture by Anthony Caro, and a collage and a box construction by Joseph Cornell.

The distinguished record of the Collectors Committee of the National Gallery, which has added important works of modern and contemporary art to the collection each year since 1975, was continued this year. The Committee made possible the acquisition of two strikingly different paintings: Malcolm Morley’s explosive Erotic Blando Fruto, and Richard Diebenkorn’s luminous Seated Figure with Hat, the latter a joint gift with Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Rubin.

Notable gifts of American art of this century included Milton Avery’s Artist and Nude from Yves-André and Christine Istel, Ilya Bolotowsky’s distinctive Cobalt Green as a partial and promised gift from Aaron Fleischman, Lee Bontecou’s Untitled metal and canvas relief as a partial and promised gift from Mr. and Mrs. Carl Gewiz, and Gene Davis’ Blue Broadjump as a gift of the Florence Coulson Davis Trust. Irving Blum generously presented the Gallery with an expansive and beautiful Kenneth Noland painting of 1970.

The friends, family, and estate of Tony Smith made it possible for the National Gallery to acquire Smith’s monumental sculpture The Snake Is Out, now dramatically installed in front of the East Building. The artist George Rickey enabled the Gallery to acquire a work in his newest format, Cluster of Four Cubes, a kinetic sculpture installed outside among trees on the side of the East Building that faces the U.S. Capitol. In both cases, fabrication costs were supplied by the Patrons’ Permanent Fund of the National Gallery.

We are grateful for several major additions of European art. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Saltzman made a partial and promised gift of Ernst Ludwig Kirchner’s expressionist painting, Two Girls under an Umbrella. Two ballet costumes designed and executed by Henri Matisse for Igor Stravinsky’s production of Le Chant du Rossignol in 1919 came to the Gallery, one given by David P. Willis and the other by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Simmons in honor of former Gallery textile conservator, the late Joseph Columbus. George and Edith Rickey gave Naum Gabo’s constructivist sculpture Linear Construction in Space No. 2. Sophie Chandler Consagra donated a painted wood and bronze sculpture by Pietro Consagra entitled Racconto alla strega no. 1. And finally, Joan Miró’s witty, monumental sculpture Personnage Gothique was acquired through the great generosity of the Morris and Gwendolyn Cafritz Foundation.

In September Jack Cowart, curator of 20th-century art, left the Gallery to become chief curator and deputy director of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, Washington. Jeremy Strick, associate curator, serves as acting head of the department.
Sculpture and Decorative Arts

Several important new sculpture acquisitions were cause for celebration this year. A late Renaissance bronze Venus and Cupid, with the goddess wringing water from her hair and attended by a shell-bearing Cupid, was installed in the Garden Café fountain in the West Building. The work of a follower of Giovanni Bologna, this Venus was a gift from John and Henrietta Goelet, in memory of Thomas Goelet, and from the Patrons’ Permanent Fund. Other smaller but very fine late Renaissance acquisitions included a gilded bronze Saint Sebastian from the circle of Hubert Gerhard, and a powerful wax statuette of a Male Nude Standing in a Fearful Pose attributed to Niccolò Tribolo, a close follower of Michelangelo. Two major plaster sculptures also joined the collection: Houdon’s George Washington given by Robert L. McNeil, Jr., and an 1898 cast of Rodin’s Age of Bronze, long used as a model for art students at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, from which the Gallery acquired it through the generosity of Iris and B. Gerald Cantor. A gift of 24 Renaissance to 19th-century medals and plaquettes from Lisa and Leonard Baskin boosted the Gallery’s preeminence in this area.

Work on the systematic catalogue continued, with progress made on the volumes of plaquettes and French sculpture. A new summary catalogue of the sculpture collection was prepared for publication to replace the 1968 edition. The sculpture department also contributed to a brochure on works in the collection related to Lorenzo de’ Medici, published in honor of the 500th anniversary of the death of that great patron and collector. Work proceeded on the catalogue and exhibition of Italian Renaissance medals being organized in collaboration with the Frick Collection.

Old Master Drawings

A series of extraordinary gifts and purchases made this a banner year for acquisitions of old master drawings. It began with the purchase of two of the greatest works on paper in America: a magnificent page from Giorgio Vasari’s Libro de’ Disegni bearing nine drawings by Filippino Lippi and one by Botticelli; and an exceptionally rare drawing of a Satyr by the Florentine sculptor Benvenuto Cellini. Both came from the collection of the late Ian Woodner, a longtime friend of the Gallery, who had considered them to be the crown jewels of his collection. At the same time, Andrea and Dian Woodner graciously donated 23 other drawings from their father’s collection and placed on deposit 121 others with the intention that those too will eventually become part of the Woodner Family Collection at the National Gallery. Among the key works in the gift were early German drawings by Dürer, Holbein the Elder, Baldung Grien, Holbein the Younger, and Hans Hoffmann; several major drawings by such Italian masters as del Sarto, Carpaccio, Barocci, Piranesi, and Giovanni Battista Tiepolo; and stellar works of the French school by Delaune, Boilly, Ingres, and Degas. The Woodner gift also included a fine Rembrandt and the Gallery’s first Goya drawing.

Another most welcome arrival at the Gallery was the collection of drawings belonging to William B. O’Neal, professor emeritus of architectural history from the University of Virginia. In all, 88 Continental drawings were given outright in honor of the Gallery’s 50th anniversary; 212 British and American drawings were placed on deposit and promised as future gifts. Many of the drawings in the O’Neal gift are the first by their artists to enter the collection, including fine works by Bassano, Alberti, Rhialta, Rosselli, Falcieri, Wyck, Kern, Pronk, Valeriani, and Doré. Also of special importance to the Gallery are the several studies of architecture and stage design, including choice works by Taraval, Fancelli, Schinkel, Langhans, Nicoletti, and Galliari, none of whom were previously represented in the Gallery’s collection.

When Armand Hammer placed his collection of old master and modern drawings on permanent deposit at the National Gallery in 1986, he did so with the commitment that the drawings would be given to the Gallery after his death. This year, in accordance with the late Dr. Hammer’s wishes, the transfer of this marvelous collection of drawings was completed, including superb examples by Leonardo, Raphael, Correggio, Tiepolo, Watteau, Fragonard, Ingres, and Degas, to name but a few. This outstanding donation brings several great masterpieces to the Gallery’s holdings and adds immeasurably to the collection as a whole.

Most of the year’s other gifts were made in honor of the Gallery’s 50th anniversary. These included a striking oil sketch by Castiglione, a partial and promised gift of Gilbert Butler; the Gallery’s first drawing by Sebastiano Ricci, purchased with funds donated by Mrs. Rudolf J. Heinemann; a richly worked early graphite drawing by Gainsborough from Mrs. Iola Haverstick; a handsome design for a stage set by Bolognese artist Pietro Gonzaga given by Frederick G. Schab; a delightful red chalk study of an Italian park by Hubert Robert donated by Mrs. John A. Pope; a charming double-

Gift in honor of Paul Mellon by the Patrons' Permanent Fund with additional support from Dick and Ritchie Scaife, Catherine Mellon Cowen, Rachel Mellon Walton, Mr. and Mrs. James M. Walton, and an anonymous donor.

A signed drawing by Baron Vivant Denon purchased with funds donated by The Christian Humann Foundation; and three diverse studies by the Swiss artist Fried-rich Salathé, given by Kurt Meissner.

In addition, two partial gifts were completed this year: Annibale Carracci’s Landscape with Figures by an Estuary with Sailing Boats from Mr. and Mrs. David Tunick; and Franz Edmond Weirrotter’s Weathered Boulders, given by Andrew Robison. Other welcome gifts of drawings came from such staunch friends as Ivan Phillips, Jean and Kahlil Gibran, and John O’Brien.

Major purchases brought several works of exceptional quality and importance to the collection. After almost 20 years of waiting for just the right drawing by the great German romantic Caspar David Friedrich, the Gallery was able to purchase a haunting wash drawing of Moonrise on an Empty Shore. This work forms a centerpiece for the Gallery’s growing collection of drawings by Friedrich’s contemporaries. Impressive in a different way is the monumental design for a metropolitan church by the French visionary architect, Etienne Boulée, which adds a neoclassical masterpiece to this steadily improving area of the collection. The holdings of northern mannerist drawings were greatly enhanced by the addition of a large study of The Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian by Aegidius Sadeler II, printmaker to the Holy Roman Emperor, Rudolf II. The early German collection gained the only known drawing by Master I.K., Four Evangelists in a Scriptorium, a charming work by an artist otherwise known only through a series of heraldic woodcuts. The baroque Italian collection... was strengthened by its first Alessandro Algardi drawing, one of his finest: a deeply emotional Christ on the Cross. The major addition to the collection of English watercolors was a magnificent work by John Robert Cozens, purchased in honor of Paul Mellon’s 85th birthday through the Patrons’ Permanent Fund with generous support from several members of his family. Finally, in an unexpected coup, the Gallery was able to acquire at auction an unrecognized and previously unknown study for an arabesque by the young Watteau. This rare, unusually complete compositional drawing, is a delightful addition to the Gallery’s other excellent studies by this great draftsman.

Discretionary purchases included several artists whose draftsmanship was not previously represented in the Gallery, among them Michael Lukas Willmann, Johan Georg Wille, Jean-Léon Gérôme, and John Carter. Other purchases added to the Gallery’s drawings by such artists as Bernardo Strozzi, Ottavio Leoni, Gaetano Gandolfi, and Giovanni Battista Cipriani.

Many new gifts and purchases were exhibited in Dürer to Diebenkorn: Recent Acquisitions of Art on Paper, the Gallery’s first such exhibition since 1978. In addition, a selection of 60 Guercino drawings from the incomparable collection of the Queen of England was presented in Guercino: Drawings from Windsor Castle. Two small exhibitions of drawings from the Armand Hammer Collection were also presented, continuing a tradition that began in 1987: the first showcased the Italian drawings, including the great Raphael cartoon; the second centered on French drawings from Watteau to Seurat, with excellent works by Fragonard, Ingres, Degas, and Pissarro.
Old Master Prints

The National Gallery acquired more than 250 prints and illustrated books this year, many of them as gifts in honor of the Gallery’s 50th anniversary. An outstanding selection of these gifts and purchases was presented in the Dürer to Diebenkorn exhibition and discussed in the catalogue.

One spectacular gift was Dürer’s monumental Triumphal Arch of Maximilian, consisting of 42 woodcuts and 2 etchings that measure 11 by 9 feet when assembled, as they were for the Dürer to Diebenkorn exhibition. Commissioned by Maximilian, emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, and completed by Dürer in 1515, the entire work was carefully reprinted by the Viennese print scholar, Adam von Bartsch, in 1799. It is this fine edition that was given to the Gallery by David Tunick. Among other significant gifts, John O’Brien donated an extensive group of French 17th-century portrait engravings, many by two leading portrait engravers, Michel Lasne and Claude Mellan; Henry and Judith Rice Millon made a generous gift of prints by various artists, including engravings by Georg Pencz and Crispijn de Passe I as well as etchings by Adrien van Ostade, David Teniers, and Giuseppe Vasi; and the late Mrs. George Benjamin Green bequeathed to the Gallery a large group of 18th-century British hand-colored naturalist engravings that depict birds, fish, lizards, and the like.

Among the important gifts that strengthened the holdings of early French prints, Hubert and Michèle Prouté and family gave four large hand-colored woodcuts, two from c. 1575 that depict Judith and Holofernes, and two from c. 1820 that represent saints. Perhaps the most extraordinary volume acquired this year, an anonymous gift, was a fine copy of the first book to be illustrated with a print by Rembrandt, Der Zee-Vaert Lof by Elias Herckmans, which is also the first such book in the Gallery’s collection. The European collection was further strengthened by an outstanding impression of Dürer’s woodcut Saint Jerome in a Cave, acquired through the Robert A. McNeil Fund; brilliant impressions of two of Hollar’s famous Shell etchings, given by Edward William Carter and Hannah Locke Carter; and the complete set of Anne Allen’s color-printed Chinese Arabesques after Jean Pillement, acquired through the Ailsa Mellon Bruce Fund.

Two superb impressions of Daumier lithographs were added to the collection of early 19th-century prints: his provocative and delightful Le Ventre Législatif was a gift from Lloyd Cutler and Polly Kraft; and the rare Grand Déménagement was given by Paul McCarron.

The department of old master prints organized an exhibition in honor of the 400th anniversary of the birth of the famed French etcher Jacques Callot (1592–1635), presenting 82 of the finest works from the Gallery’s extensive collection of prints by this master. Except for one purchase, these prints were given by the late Lessing J. Rosenwald and the late Rudolf L. Baumfeld. The Gallery recorded some 140,000 visits to the show.

Modern Prints and Drawings

In another exceptional year for acquisitions, the National Gallery received a vibrant array of modern prints and drawings. Many of the gifts came from artists and their families, the most extensive being three groups of prints: the Milton Avery Archive from the artist’s family includes an impression of each of Avery’s woodcuts, drypoints, and lithographs not previously in the Gallery’s collection (many in variant impressions), along with the woodblocks and metal plates from which they were printed; Sam Francis donated a large, brilliantly colored monotype as well as 54 self-portraits in lithography and etching; June Wayne added 25 of her lithographs to the collection, and her gift was augmented by one from Lloyd Rigler that included four of Wayne’s major lithographic suites and several individual pieces. Seven lithographs by Louis Lozowick were donated by Adele and Lee Lozowick.

Among this year’s acquisitions, several artists were represented in the collection of drawings for the first time. Wayne Thiebaud’s drawing Study of Cakes, given by the Thiebaud family, is a marvelous complement to the artist’s Cakes painting, acquired last year in honor of the Gallery’s 50th anniversary. Eric Fischl and Mary Boone donated Fischl’s Untitled, a powerful figure composition in charcoal.

The Gallery was also delighted to receive Robert Smithson’s graphite and blue pencil Moodna Quadrants and two graphite studies for the sheet from the estate of the artist as well as four additional drawings by Smithson in a variety of media from Werner H. and Sarah-Ann Kramarsky.

As part of the acquisition of the Dorothy and Herbert Vogel Collection, a group of 143 drawings was added to the Gallery’s holdings, including sheets by Richard Artschwager, Lynda Benglis, John Cage, Christo, Donald Judd, Sol LeWitt, Robert Mangold, Sylvia Plimack Mangold, Joel Shapiro, and Richard Tuttle. Gifts of individual drawings were led by Paul Mellon’s donation of two extraordinary reed pen drawings by van Gogh done at Arles in 1888, two of Pendergast’s most appealing watercolors of Boston and New York scenes, and a fascinating sketchbook used by Cézanne from 1877 to 1900 that contains 72 drawings by the master. Other gifts include our first Civil War watercolor by Winslow Homer, Two Scouts, given by Nancy Voorhees; Matisse’s sinuous Reclining Nude from Henry and Mabel Brandon; Arthur Dove’s charming watercolor, From Cows, given by Collectors Committee members Mr. and Mrs. William C. Janss; Gaston Lachaise’s Nude with Her Hands Raised from Mr. and Mrs. Harry A. Brooks; and Isabel Bishop’s Two Girls Reading from Dr. and Mrs. Robert Nowinski. Jim Dine’s lively early graphite and ink drawing Plant to Fan Growth, donated by Ruth and Don Saff, is a wonderful complement to Dine’s cast aluminum sculpture, Metamorphosis of a Plant into a Fan, given to the Gallery by the artist last year. Other drawings of the 1960s and 1970s include Frank Stella’s Untitled (study for Kay Bearman), a gift from Larry Rubin that is related to a print in our Gemini G.E.L. Archive; and James Rosenquist’s mysterious charcoal and graphite Circles of Confusion, donated by Richard Feigen and closely related to a Rosenquist screenprint in the 11 Pop Artists portfolio, which was given to the Gallery this year by Francine Schear Linde. A bequest from Esther Cattell Schmitt enabled the Gallery to acquire Nancy Graves’ important paintings on paper in the Lunar Orbiter Series, ten works in gouache and india ink dating from 1972. Along with several major works of painting and sculpture, Robert and Jane Meyerhoff donated Joseph Cornell’s mixed-media collage Penny Arcade as well as our first work on paper by David Salle, an untitled watercolor. Regina Slatkin added nine works to previous gifts of drawings and collages for the Modern Masters Tapestries, including the colorful Circe, the first work by Romare Bearden to enter the collection.

In the field of prints, the family of Sigbert H. Marcy augmented their previous donation of prints by Lovis Corinth, this time with 129 lithographs and etchings that Mr. Marcy had acquired directly from the artist. Eight lithographs and woodcuts by Ernst Ludwig Kirchner were added to the splendid parade of gifts we have received from Ruth and Jacob Kainen; two of these are unique proofs with additions made by hand. Charles Ryskamp gave a group of prints by members of William Blake’s circle, including brilliant impressions of etchings by Samuel Palmer and John Linnell. In addition to her own lithographs, June Wayne donated 54 prints and portfolios by 29 artists, including our first works by Elaine de Kooning, Yvonne Jacquette, and Michelle Stuart. Crown Point Press gave an important group of 26 etchings and woodcuts, including many special proofs, by Richard Diebenkorn, Al Held, William T. Wiley, and our first prints by Pat Steir. Joshua P. Smith donated additional prints made at Crown Point Press as part of a gift of works by 17 contemporary European and American artists, including our first prints by Jürgen Partenheimer and Jean-Charles Blais as well as our first book by Sol LeWitt, a volume of 45 color etchings. Complementing the LeWitt book, Virginia Dwan donated a group of that artist's screenprints. Also adding an important dimension to our growing collection of modern illustrated books, the Paula Cooper Gallery gave us our first work by Elizabeth Murray, Her Story, a volume of 13 etchings that accompany a poem by Anne Waldman.

Among our most important purchases of prints is a rare set of James McNeill Whistler’s lithographs entitled Notes, complete in the original wrapper designed by the artist. Discretionary funds from the Collectors Committee enabled the Gallery to acquire its first etching by Lucian Freud, Kai; Joan Mitchell’s sumptuous lithographs Flower I and Bedford II; and 11 etchings by Tony Cragg, Laboratory Still Life No. 2 and two groups of prints from the Suburbs series.

In celebration of the National Gallery’s Käthe Kollwitz exhibition, Dr. Richard Simms donated the powerful lithograph by Kollwitz, Never Again War. Correlated with the Kollwitz show was a focused Kirchner retrospective, including many master prints and drawings recently acquired by the Gallery or lent by private collectors. In addition, this department organized the section of contemporary prints and drawings in the Dürer to Diebenkorn exhibition; worked with curators of 20th-century art to install works on paper from the collection in the East Building concourse galleries; and worked with the National Lending Service on several exhibitions. We contributed to the summary catalogue of sculpture in the collection, specifically with respect to edition sculptures that are part of our Gemini G.E.L. and Graphicstudio Archives; continued to enter the 18,000 renderings in the Index of American Design into the Gallery's collection management database; and made progress on preparations for two major exhibitions: Helen Frankenthaler: Prints, scheduled for 1993, and The Prints of Roy Lichtenstein, planned for 1994.

The National Gallery's curator of modern prints and drawings, in partnership with the Georgia O'Keeffe Foundation, this year began coordination of the catalogue raisonné of O'Keeffe's paintings, watercolors, drawings, and sculpture. Barbara Buhler Lynes has agreed to conduct the research for this important undertaking, with publication projected for 1998.

Photographs

The National Gallery this year received the major gift of 55 photographs by Paul Strand, donated by Southwestern Bell Corporation. This group represents Strand's entire career, from his highly acclaimed photographs of 1916 to his last studies, made in the 1970s, of his garden in Orgeval, France. It contains such celebrated images as his Blind Woman, New York, a portrait of his mentor Alfred Stieglitz, his striking study Ranchos de Taos Church, New Mexico, and the important Lusetti Family, Luzzara, Italy. Strand was one of the most accomplished craftsmen among photographers of his generation, and the Southwestern Bell gift includes magnificent platinum and silver gelatin prints. These photographs, a superb addition to the Gallery collection, formed the core of our recent Paul Strand exhibition, which opened at the Gallery in December 1990 and traveled this year to Houston, New York, and San Francisco.

Other notable gifts included the first color photographs to enter the National Gallery collections. Mr. and Mrs. David C. Ruttenberg of The Ruttenberg Arts Foundation gave the Gallery two dye-transfer prints by Harry Callahan, Venice and Providence. Mr. and Mrs. Harry H. Lunn, Jr., gave seven color photographs by Walker Evans in honor of the Gallery's 50th anniversary. These photographs, made between 1945 and 1972, are important additions to our holdings of this major American photographer's work. Katherine L. Meier and Edward J. Lenz also significantly enriched the Evans collection by donating a magnificent vintage print of The Breadline from the important series of photographs Evans made in Cuba in 1933 for publication in Carleton Beals' study The Crime of Cuba. Virginia Adams enhanced the Gallery's collection of Ansel Adams' work with her 50th anniversary gift of the extremely rare, mural-sized print of Coast South of Saint Sebastian, Oregon. Finally, the Dorothy and Herbert Vogel Collection, which so significantly expanded the Gallery's holdings of contemporary art in general, included 14 important photographs by the conceptual artist Sol LeWitt.

This year the Gallery opened the exhibition Walker Evans: Subway Photographs and Other Recent Acquisitions. The show focused on an important but rarely exhibited group of photographs Evans made on the New York subways between 1938 and 1941 with a small 35mm camera hidden beneath his coat. These photographs marked a radical change in Evans' career and predicted the course that American photography would take after World War II. In addition to the 33 prints from the subway series, the exhibition included 33 prints from both earlier and later in Evans' career. The department also contributed several recent acquisitions to the Dürer to Diebenkorn exhibition and progressed with organization of our Robert Frank collection and the forthcoming Frank exhibition.
The Gallery continued to receive visitors to the print study rooms: 802 scholars, collectors, students, and other visitors came to view and study old master prints and drawings in the East Building study room, while 396 studied modern prints, drawings, and photographs in our West Building study room.

Research on Collections

The major task of this young department is the production of an approximately 30-volume systematic catalogue on the National Gallery’s collections. With two volumes in print at the end of fiscal year 1992, curators, outside scholars, research associates, conservators, and editors are hard at work on the remaining catalogues, with a new goal of publishing three volumes each year through the year 2000. The publication of four volumes is anticipated in the next fiscal year, including American Naive Paintings, British Paintings, German Paintings, and Western Decorative Arts: Part 1. Thanks to the generosity of the Starr Foundation, the Gallery is planning to publish the volume on Asian ceramics with color illustrations.

Systematic catalogue author Timothy Wilson of the Ashmolean Museum worked closely with National Gallery object conservators to host an exciting television-colloquium on Saint Porcheire ceramics. Through the latest audiovisual technology, specialists at the Gallery, the Victoria & Albert Museum in London, and the Louvre in Paris were able to share research on these works and to view pieces simultaneously using high resolution digital imaging.

The Gallery has made strides in its efforts to serve at the forefront of this groundbreaking field of digital imaging, ably led by contract advisor Kim Nielsen. After identifying the technological requirements and goals of education, conservation, publishing, and other staff, this department has forged numerous associations within the computer industry and holds under consideration many high-profile and behind-the-scenes projects. More than $3 million worth of state-of-the-art equipment and services has been donated by companies such as IBM, Apple, GTE ImageSpan, and Sharp Electronics. Ranging from computers, printers, and scanners to software, this equipment will be used to capture electronic images of both art and art-related documents.

Curatorial Records

With the implementation of a new collection management database system this year, the National Gallery significantly augmented its ability to record and make available scholarly information on works of art in its collections. Incorporating the Gallery's original database and a scholarly database developed by curatorial records staff, this system now includes provenance, exhibition histories, and literature for more than 1,000 objects, biographies and bibliographies for more than 200 artists, and basic cataloguing data on all works of art in the National Gallery collections. The database is kept up to date as reattributions and title and date changes are made, as systematic catalogue research is completed, and as physical characteristics (dimensions, materials, inscriptions, etc.) are clarified. Not only is access to information greatly expanded and facilitated, for both Gallery staff and outside scholars and students, but the relational structure of the database enables researchers to gather and combine information in new ways.

The department also maintains paper files that contain information on all National Gallery paintings, sculpture, and decorative arts. The files include official documents, publications, press clippings, correspondence, and other materials, comprising an original, irreplaceable archival resource. This year 160 outside researchers consulted curatorial files, and department staff responded to 45 written and telephone inquiries from other institutions and individuals.

For recent changes of attribution, please see the list on pages 120-123 of this report.

Registration

Statistics will show that this was an unusually busy year for the registrar's office. As the National Gallery completed its 50th anniversary celebrations, the total number of gifts and purchases of works of art received during the fiscal year was 1,745: 56 paintings, 87 sculptures, 2 decorative art objects, 1,503 works of graphic art (drawings, prints, bound volumes, and portfolios), and 97 photographs. This tremendous number of acquisitions was exceeded only by the 1,864 received last year. For a complete record of art acquisitions for fiscal year 1992, please see pages 99-119 of this report. The copyist program also continued to flourish with 122 permits issued.

In addition, outgoing loans of works of art totaled 2,313, incoming loans for exhibition reached 1,597, and objects received for other purposes numbered 1,392. The logistics of handling the packing, shipping, and installation of nearly 600 works of art borrowed from 200
Gold ornaments on display in Circa 1492 included the Diquís Bat and Human Bird Figure lent by the Museo de Oro Precolombino, Banco Central de Costa Rica, San José; the Sinu Bird Staff Head from the George Ortiz Collection; and the Sinu Finial with Five Birds from the National Museum of the American Indian, New York.

Concurrently, the department helped complete the reinstallation of the main floor galleries in the West Building, collaborated on a new and ongoing project to catalogue frames in the collection, and continued its support of research for the systematic catalogue. The latter project required the recall of American paintings from local government agencies for examination as well as transport of medals, plaquettes, French furniture, and Chinese porcelains within the Gallery. Additional art handlers were hired on contract to support the department’s various activities this year.

The new collection management database system has enabled the registrar’s office to track loans and deposits far more efficiently than in the past. It generates receipts, reports, and deposit cards automatically and provides more detailed and accurate location information. This system will eventually replace entirely the old manual system.

The National Gallery acquired a new state-of-the-art truck for transporting works of art locally and regionally: it is alarmed and climate-controlled, with systems monitored from the cab; and it has air-ride suspension and room in the cab to accommodate couriers. Major renovations of the loading dock will permit 45-foot tractor trailers to back into a new bay, equipped with a lift that adjusts to meet doors of any height; other improvements include a new leveler next to the new bay and additional guard rails for safety. New doors in the Connecting Link that open from floor to ceiling give unobstructed clearance for moving large works of art and equipment from the loading dock to storage and the East Building.

Sally Freitag returned to the Gallery from the Worcester Museum of Art to become chief registrar and head of the division.

Loans and the National Lending Service

The National Lending Service now offers eight small exhibitions of works from the Gallery’s collections and is organizing two exhibitions... others: Masterprints from Graphicstudio and American Naive Paintings. The NLS exhibition of early paintings by Mark Rothko appeared at the Nassau County Museum of Art in New York State. Exhibitions of paintings by George Catlin were shown at Live Oak Gardens in New Iberia, Louisiana, and at the Museums at Hartwick College in Oneonta, New York. In addition, a booklet about George Catlin was published this year, written by Donna Mann of the Gallery’s education department. It is intended to be sold to museums that borrow any of the three NLS Catlin exhibitions, and it is available for sale in Gallery bookstores. The department promoted NLS exhibitions at the American Association of Museums meeting in Baltimore and at the International Council of Museums meeting in Quebec City, Canada. Information about the NLS and its exhibition program was sent to museums in the U.S. and abroad and also appeared in the newsletter of the national association of traveling exhibition organizations. As a result of this increased publicity, many museums have expressed interest in borrowing the NLS shows, and the Gallery has a list of 30 prospective bookings extending through 1995.

In addition to the NLS programs, the department administered loans for numerous other exhibitions: 35 graphic works by Richard Tuttle were sent to Valencia, Spain, for a show of that artist’s work; 55 photographs in the Gallery’s Paul Strand exhibition traveled to New York City and San Francisco; 60 photographs in the Gallery’s Walker Evans exhibition went to Andover, Massachusetts; and 133 old master prints in the Eva/Joan: Woman in Renaissance Prints exhibition will open early in the next fiscal year at the National Gallery of Canada. At the same time, department staff planned the loans of two important groups of 19th-century paintings from the Gallery’s collections that will be traveling to Greece and Portugal.

In all, the department this year administered the loan of 474 objects for 92 temporary exhibitions at 130 institutions and the extended loan of 273 works at 63 sites. Of these, works in the NLS comprised 113 loans to 24 temporary exhibitions at 39 institutions as well as 271 of the extended loans; 7 works were on temporary exchange loan at 4 museums, including 4 NLS paintings at 2 sites. Loans of 195 works to the Gallery for display with the permanent collection were also processed by this department. For a complete record of loans, please see pages 124-129 and 131 of this report.

Conservation

The conservation division joined curatorial and education departments to co-sponsor a symposium on Albert Bierstadt’s materials and techniques and is now editing the papers for publication. The division’s co-sponsorship last year of the International Conference on the Packing and Transportation of Paintings led to a series of workshops on safe packing and shipping procedures. This joint venture with the Smithsonian Institution and the Canadian Conservation Institute provides a two-day course for art handlers, registrars, curators, and conservators. Workshops have been held at the Smithsonian and the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, as well as for the Association of Art Museum Directors. Future workshops will be held in Dallas, Chicago, Los Angeles, Vancouver, Montreal, and Washington.

The division completed production work on the first issue of Conservation Research, a publication dedicated to providing conservation information on the National Gallery of Art’s collection. It will be the principal outlet for disseminating research conducted by conservation fellows and staff.

Painting Conservation

The completion of 14 major treatments this year helped preserve and enhance the beauty of paintings in the collection. Rembrandt’s Self-Portrait of 1659 was treated, revealing even greater depth and power than previously visible. Treatment of Turner’s early Junction of the Thames and the Medway brought to light a dra-mantic scene of stormy waters and skies, which had been flat and dull in its previous state. Work on Rosso Fiorentino's Portrait of a Man restored the original finely textured surface and rich, simple coloring. The miniature-like technique and exquisite 15th-century colors of Mantegna's Judith and Holofernes can be newly appreciated, as can the depth, atmosphere, and light impressionist colors of the recently acquired Monet canvas, The Japanese Footbridge, following treatment of these two works.

The treatment and analysis of several paintings long doubted as being by Rembrandt have prompted the Gallery to consider reattributing these works to followers of Rembrandt with varying degrees of participation by the master. Work on the charming Girl with a Broom and the small Head of an Aged Woman was completed, while work on The Descent from the Cross and The Circumcision is ongoing. The other major treatments involved Hobbesma's Farm in the Sunlight, Louis Le Nain's French Interior, Tiepolo's Madonna of the Goldfinch, Reynolds' Lady Betty Hamilton, Derain's Charing Cross Bridge, and two fine Henri portraits, Mr. and Mrs. George Cotton Smith.

In addition, 105 minor treatments and 820 minor examinations were carried out, using x-ray and infrared reflectography or visual inspection in the galleries upon request. The 187 major examinations completed for the ongoing systematic catalogue project this year included technical examinations of 15th-, 17th-, and 18th-century Italian paintings, French painting from 1800 to 1860, and half of the American academic portraits.

The Circa 1492 exhibition brought many great paintings to the National Gallery on loan and allowed the unique opportunity to compare two rare portraits by Leonardo da Vinci—the Gallery's own Ginevra de' Benci and the Czartoryski Museum's Cecilia Gallerani, or The Lady with the Ermine, from Cracow, Poland. The paintings were closely examined under microscope by the Gallery's chairman of painting conservation and by the Polish curator and conservator. The details and results were photographed, documented, and discussed. The Polish conservator spent the three-month duration of the exhibition as a visiting expert in the lab, and much valuable exchange of information resulted. Other great masterpieces in the exhibition, such as Bosch's Temptation of Saint Anthony from the Museo del Arte Antigua in Lisbon, were examined with lab equipment to provide technical information to lenders without similar access.

The Gallery's new conservator for modern painting, Jay Krueger, has focused much attention on the 20th-century collection, especially on numerous minor treatments to bring the large Rothko and Vogel collections into prime condition. Painting conservators continued to work closely with curators on questions of ar-lists' techniques, to inspect incoming or outgoing loans for exhibitions, to serve as couriers for paintings at home and abroad, and to examine paintings on loan to Washington area government offices through the National Lending Service. Extensive work continued on improving infrared imaging capabilities.

The new Culpeper Fellow, Jane Tillinghast, began treatment of a painting by the Venetian artist Carpaccio and undertook research into his techniques. The two Getty Interns for the year were Monika Strolz, from the Kunsthistorisches Museum in Vienna, and Tom Learner, from the Courtauld Institute in London, who spent half of his time with the scientific research department.

PAPER CONSERVATION

Paper conservators cared for works in the collection this year in a great variety of ways. New acquisitions in the Dürrer to Diebenkorn exhibition of prints and drawings required numerous examinations and treatments. One of the most notable was the mounting and installation of Dürrer's Triumphal Arch of Maximilian, which measures 11 x 9 feet and is made up of 44 separate printed sheets. These sheets, connected to one another and affixed to a support that could be easily disassembled for storage, formed a dramatic entrance to the exhibition. Antoine Watteau's drawing of The Gallant Gardener, very recently acquired, was a last-minute addition to the exhibition, and the major treatment, which included removal of the backing, stain reduction, infilling of minor losses, and flattening, was completed in time for the exhibition opening.

The department treated a number of works in the major gift of drawings from William B. O'Neal, including Bassano's Landscape with a Man and a Dog, which required removal of the backing and discolorations as well as mends and fills of losses. In addition, a black and white chalk drawing of Venus on blue paper by Pierre-Paul Prud'Hon received extensive treatment to remove stains with a new inverted suction disc technique; and conservators provided major fills and in-painting of losses for The Shipwreck by Elihu Vedder.

When a dry-mounted backing was removed from a drawing in the collection attributed to Jan Linglebach, Piazza by Moonlight, an obscured signature by Thomas Wyck was discovered. Further research by the conservator on Wyck's paintings and drawings as well as his signature has confirmed the reattribution of this drawing to Thomas Wyck.

The department continued its study and treatment of the rapidly growing photograph collection. Photograph conservators collaborated with conservators at the Getty Museum and the Art Institute of Chicago to determine the best way to monitor changes in photographic images; colorimetry, spectrophotometry, and densitometry are among the techniques being investigated. Conservators studied photographs by Alfred Steiglitz using x-ray fluorescence to determine the processes employed by the artist. This research was undertaken in conjunction with examinations and treatments for the Steiglitz in the Darkroom exhibition scheduled for fiscal year 1993.

This year the Gallery hired a new senior paper conservator, Judy Walsh, and engaged a rare book conservator on contract to implement the conservation program in that area. Treatments for rare books in the library's collections will adhere to the standards and protocol already in place for other curatorial areas.

OBJECT CONSERVATION

This year's major projects centered on works of art in the permanent collection. The department chaired the first CASVA Conservation Colloquy, devoted to "Saint Porchaire" ceramics. The history of these rare, enigmatic ceramics of the French Renaissance and the circumstances of their fabrication have long been debated. The international group of scholars invited for the week-long meeting brought together for the first time technical and art historical findings.

The department also hosted the first live, international digital imaging and video conference to discuss the Saint Porchaire ceramics. Applying technology provided by GTE ImageSpan, this remarkable demonstration permitted simultaneous viewing of high resolution digital images and interaction among participants at the Gallery, the Louvre in Paris, and the Victoria & Albert in London. An educational video taken from footage of the exchange is being made by Athena Muse at MIT.

Several major treatments were completed during the year. The plaster relief by Elie Nadelman, Two Nudes, required a new structural mounting and inpainting before reinstallation. Conservators treated two outdoor sculptures, resurfacing Wandering Rocks by Tony Smith after 11 years of exposure to the environment, and realigning several damaged bronze elements of Tonal Sculpture by Harry Bertoia. The 1/12-scale plaster maquette of Henry Moore’s monumental sculpture, Knife Edge Mirror Two Piece, was also treated.

Three important acquisitions required collaboration among conservators, curators, design and installation staff, and facilities management. The team installed a bronze sculpture for the Garden Café fountain, Venus and Cupid by a follower of Giovanni Bologna, with internal plumbing that permitted water to flow naturally through Venus’ hair and from the dolphin’s mouth. Although this sculpture was intended to have been cast in one piece, technical study including x-radiograph and x-ray fluorescence spectroscopy revealed that part of the base and one of the feet were cast separately as a contemporary repair. Staff installed two other acquisitions on the Gallery grounds: a kinetic sculpture by George Rickey, Cluster of Four Cubes, on the Gallery’s easternmost lawn; and the multi-dimensional The Snake Is Out by Tony Smith on the lawn in front of the East Building. Meetings with artists and fabricators during planning stages helped ensure that these two sculptures were manufactured from the most appropriate materials for continual outdoor exposure.

Comprehensive technical examinations completed for the systematic catalogue included study of the Gallery’s large and important collection of wax sculptures by Edgar Degas, which has revealed fascinating aspects of the artist’s working methods. Thorough examination of the polychromed terra-cotta relief of the Madonna and Child by Giovanni di Torino was completed in preparation for its major treatment. Examination of the anonymously executed Ivory Diptych, representing the Life of Christ, confirmed that it is a masterful late 19th-century reproduction of a 15th-century model.

In preparation for upcoming volumes of the systematic catalogue, object conservators examined nearly 300 Renaissance plaquettes, reviewed more than 200 entries on the portrait medals, contributed to the introductory essays for Asian Ceramics and Decorative Arts, and edited nearly 200 entries on the Asian ceramic collection.

Funded by a Samuel H. Kress Foundation grant, the department worked with the University of Georgia to complete the first phase of a provenance study of marble. An expanded stable isotopic database is being produced that will characterize the marbles used for Renaissance and French 18th- and 19th-century sculpture in the collection. The new Mellon Fellow, Penelope Edmonds, from the Australian Museum in Sydney, studied the manufacture and conservation of Italian polychrome sculpture.

In addition to its support of the collection, the department this year was integrally involved with several temporary exhibitions, including Circa 1492, Art of the American Indian Frontier, and The Greek Miracle, completing approximately 650 condition examinations.

TEXTILE CONSERVATION

The National Gallery hired Julia Burke as the new textile conservator this year. In conjunction with scientific research staff, she investigated the solubility of binding media found in the Gallery's collection of theorem paintings, with specific regard to future treatment techniques. Research continued on the stability of dyes used in the conservation of tapestries, and research was initiated on appropriate materials to be used in Gallery exhibitions. The department completed 37 major treatments, 44 minor treatments, and 103 examinations of works for exhibition.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH

The scientific research department continued to respond to requests for analysis from conservators and curators at the National Gallery and occasionally from other institutions. Gas chromatography and pyrolysis/gas chromatography/mass spectrometry were used to identify the medium of various paintings and sculptures. Amino acid analysis was used to identify proteinaceous binders and to uncover mixed-media techniques in paintings by Veneziano and by the workshop of Rembrandt. The department examined ancient Egyptian paint binders in collaboration with the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, and provided medium analyses for the Phillips Collection's upcoming exhibition of works by Jacob Lawrence.

Microscopic and other technical analyses were performed on paintings by Gentileschi, Gerard David, van Eyck, Rembrandt and his workshop, among others. Technical examinations of paintings by Albert Bierstadt contributed important information for the recent symposium on the artist and his works. The department also provided pigment analyses and other technical information for the Barnes Collection.

In collaboration with fellows and interns in the Gallery's other conservation departments, technical studies were carried out on a polychrome terra cotta by the circle of Giovanni di Torino, on Hobbema's Farm in the Sunlight, and on sculpture by David Smith; technical assistance was provided in a study of the formation of tidelines on paper; and technical examination of wax sculpture by Degas was continued.

Research proceeded on natural and synthetic resins. These materials, of potential use to conservators, are being evaluated by a variety of techniques. Although work is still in progress, new insights have been gained into the optical properties of varnishes. Polymeric additives have been shown to improve optical as well as mechanical properties of low-molecular-weight synthetic coatings.

Several new instruments were purchased, including a rotary microtome, a pyrolysis unit for the gas chromatograph/mass spectrometer, and a scanning electron microscope. The microtome produces thin sections of paint chips to be used for light microscopy and infrared microspectrophotometry. The pyrolysis unit is used to examine the composition and aging behavior of polymeric materials. A simultaneous pyrolysis/methylation technique is applied to the analysis of paint binders. Scanning electron microscopy provides additional compositional information on paint chips, metallographic samples, and other artists’ materials. In addition, a new computer workstation was purchased to upgrade the x-ray fluorescence spectrometer, enabling more efficient data acquisition, analysis, storage, and transfer.

Dr. Christopher Maines, Mellon Fellow, continued to study synthetic resins used as binding media, to quantitate physical characteristics of paints, such as adhesion, color development, and working properties, and to examine changes in these characteristics during aging of the paints. Three Getty Interns have undertaken various research projects: Thomas Learner, serving jointly in the painting conservation department, studied solvent retention and the saturation and gloss of clear coatings for several resin/solvent/paint systems; Laura Celli explored the analysis of polysaccharide gums by high pressure liquid chromatography; and Barry Taylor will artificially age inks prepared by traditional techniques and examine the water soluble decomposition products through chromatography to study the mechanism by which iron gall ink degrades paper. Finally, the Gallery hired a research conservator for painting technology this year, E. Melanie Gifford, who brings the department unique skills in the study of historic painting materials and techniques.

LOANS AND EXHIBITIONS

It would be difficult to match the pace and intensity of preparations for Circa 1492, which opened at the beginning of the fiscal year, but the department continued to participate in the planning and organization of numerous exhibitions throughout the year. Conservators assisted with Art of the American Indian Frontier, El Jaleo, Alice Neel, Käthe Kollwitz, Ernst Ludwig Kirchner, and the shows of Guercino paintings and drawings. The Greek Miracle, scheduled to open in fiscal year 1993, also required considerable attention because of the size and fragility of the sculpture.

Preliminary preparations were underway for other fiscal year 1993 exhibitions, including Ellsworth Kelly, Great French Paintings from The Barnes Foundation, and Mondrian. Conservators examined many works of art in situ, assessing the condition of objects proposed for exhibition. In collaboration with lenders, the department has also developed specifications for handling, packing, shipping, and installing the works of art.

Matters and framers were increasingly in demand because of the growing number of graphics exhibitions. Nine temporary exhibitions, five major loans, and two maintenance projects required the matting of 1,119 objects, the framing of 1,444 others, the mounting of 67 books, and the manufacture of 119 frames. The department continues to develop unique solutions for problems encountered in the display and storage of works of art on paper. Some of these projects included antique housings for works in the El Jaleo and Dürer to Diebenkorn exhibitions and designing a very large mount for Dürer’s Triumphal Arch of Maximilian.

For frame conservators, work on the permanent collection was particularly hectic this year because of the reinstallation of the West Building. This necessitated the construction of 12 frames and the reframing of 7 paintings with period frames as well as the completion of 4 major and 145 minor treatments. In addition, frame conservators have been working with the registrar’s office and the design and installation staff to catalogue frames in the collection; this year 245 frames were catalogued and photographed. Exhibition-related responsibilities included the design and construction of 7 climate-control vitrines for paintings on loan, the manufacture of 50 frames, and the completion of 43 minor treatments.
Exhibitions

The exhibitions office oversaw the opening of 17 exhibitions at the National Gallery in the past fiscal year, for which 312 lenders from 29 states and 33 countries lent 1,162 works of art. We are extremely grateful to these lenders, who are acknowledged on pages 129–131 of this report. The department also worked on another 37 exhibitions scheduled to open in the next 5 years and administered the tours of 6 traveling exhibitions.

Design and Installation

Fiscal year 1992 brought new and continuing challenges for the design department. Reinstallation of the permanent collection in the main floor galleries of the West Building proceeded without interruption. New lighting, labeling of works of art, and wall signs were finished in time for summer visitors. With additional funding, the remaining galleries will receive proper period wall finishes and will be equipped with educational gallery guides. Art acquisitions and changes in the works on display due to loan or conservation treatment require ongoing revision of the installations.

The department is collaborating with curatorial and conservation staff to review all of the framed paintings in the Gallery collections. An inventory and documentation of all painting frames up to the mid-20th century has been undertaken and has resulted in notable reframing solutions of either period or appropriate reproduction frames. Funding from The Circle of the National Gallery of Art enabled the Gallery to begin development of a digital imaging system through application of existing photographic frame documentation. This will allow curators and designers to explore reframing possibilities from the digital database and will ensure the most effective use of the Gallery’s frame collection.

Among the exhibitions that proved most challenging for the design and installation department this year, Circa 1492 displayed nearly 600 works of art from around the world, representing the visual arts and culture of the three major divisions of the globe during this extraordinary period of exploration: “Europe and the Mediterranean World,” “Toward Cathay,” and “The Americas.” A mural-sized photographic reproduction of a Spanish explorer’s map greeted visitors at the entrance to the exhibition on the East Building mezzanine and introduced the image of the rose compass and navigational lines that appeared throughout the exhibition graphics.

The first section covered a striking variety of cultures and themes, from Portuguese and Spanish to African and Islamic empires, from mapping and linear perspective to representations of the human figure. The section opened with the rare 14th-century Catalan Atlas and Hieronymus Bosch’s magnificent Temptation of Saint Anthony, and closed with the exquisite Lady with an Ermine by Leonardo. In between, objects as diverse as books and manuscripts, carpets and tapestries, gold and other precious metalwork, globes and astronomical instruments, along with paintings and sculpture were displayed in simple, understated architectural spaces. Highlights of the installation included a large carpet of Spanish origin mounted on an inclined plane in a soaring gallery illuminated by translucent clerestory windows. The last gallery in this section brought together works by two of the preeminent masters of the Renaissance, Leonardo da Vinci and Albrecht Dürer, with works by Leonardo on one side of the room and works by Dürer on the other. Hanging overhead was a fantastic chandelier designed by Leonardo from the city hall in Nuremberg.

The next section of the exhibition, “Toward Cathay,” presented works of art from Japan, Korea, China, and India. These galleries contained the greatest number of fragile objects, which required rotation with other objects during the exhibition’s run. Pottery, sculpture, armor, furniture, monochromatic ink paintings, masks, and folding screens were displayed on simple platforms or in large glazed wall cases with cedar trim and fabric-covered interiors designed to provide stable temperature and humidity environments. The division on “Ming China” was the largest in the exhibition, since an extraordinary gesture by the Chinese government gave the Gallery an opportunity to show many objects from this period that had never left mainland China before. Spacious galleries were painted a subtle beige with quiet lighting. The last gallery of the section was small with richly painted burgundy walls showing beautiful examples of the art from the subcontinent of India.

The third and last section of the exhibition focused on the art of “The Americas,” including the Aztec, Inca, North, South, and Central American cultures. Stone sculptures, wooden drums, gold ornaments, mosaics, rare codices, and ceramics of the Aztecs were displayed under natural light in galleries painted dark earth colors; doorways were designed to evoke geometric Aztec arches and covered in a dark faux stone finish, along with pedestals and cases. In the Inca gallery a beautiful composition of tunics with bold geometric designs was shown with a feather tunic, ceramics, jewelry, and a priceless 16th-century letter to the Spanish king that pleads for better treatment of the native people. The next gallery, which combined South American and North American art of the period, featured an extraordinary feather cloak in a central case, while displays around the room presented wooden, stone, bone, beaded, ceramic, and metal objects. The final room in the exhibition, painted a dark green, was dominated by a dazzling display of gold finials, body ornaments, and figurines created as offerings to the gods.

At the exit to Circa 1492 was screened a mural of the famous NASA photograph of Earth Rising, illustrating that the age of exploration begun in the 15th century continues today.

The Albert Bierstadt exhibition took advantage of the large West Building main floor galleries, with their high ceilings and natural light, to display 72 epic paintings by this 19th-century American artist. The walls were painted in rich, dark hues, and the artificial lighting was carefully controlled to feature the remarkable use of light in Bierstadt’s works. Along with paintings lent by many public and private collections, the exhibition included the Gallery’s recent acquisition of Bierstadt’s pivotal early painting, Lake Lucerne, given to the Gallery by Richard M. Scaife and Margaret R. Battle in honor of the Gallery’s 50th anniversary. Restored to its original brilliance, the painting was hung at the end of a large gallery at the conclusion of the European section, anticipating the artist’s dramatic American Western landscapes shown in succeeding rooms. The last large-scale painting in the exhibition, The Last of the Buffalo, was shown alone in a gallery with didactic panels that explained the history of this famous work.

Two “focus” exhibitions revolved around single works of art. The Gallery’s newly restored Saint Anne Altarpiece by Gerard David was the basis for one presentation, which reunited our three large panels with three of the six smaller paintings thought to have been part of the original predella. The second exhibition was centered on John Singer Sargent’s magnificent El Jaleo, lent by the Isabella Stewart Gardener Museum in Boston. Three East Building mezzanine galleries designed for this exhibition were painted in dark colors and joined by faux stone archways. The first room displayed early related paintings and drawings. The second featured an arresting full-length study of the central figure, entitled Spanish Dancer, along with other related drawings and sketchbooks. The third set apart the El Jaleo, seen on axis through a large archway reused from Circa 1492, with “footlights” to provide dramatic lighting for the composition.

Two exhibitions of works by Guercino were installed in West Building galleries just off the East Garden Court. The first consisted of 60 extraordinary drawings from Windsor Castle, hung here on neutral-colored panels edged with fine beading; artificial light was carefully focused to enhance the viewer’s experience of these beautiful works. The second exhibition presented 59 paintings spanning Guercino’s entire career, installed chronologically in spacious galleries adjacent to the drawings. Because many paintings were among the largest ever shown at the National Gallery, the department had to construct large baffles that reached nearly to the ceiling. With the high ceilings in these galleries, judicious lighting, and the walls painted in baroque period hues, the colorful and dynamic paintings by Guercino were shown to great advantage.

Two exhibitions were part of the local “Tribute to Germany” cultural festival coordinated by the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. Käthe Kollwitz displayed drawings, prints, and sculpture by the artist in four galleries defined by white walls that bore no molding except
One of the great challenges and delights for the department this year was the design and installation of Art of the American Indian Frontier, with its entrance graphic adapted from the powerful design on a Potawatomi blanket. This was the largest and most complex showing of American Indian art with which the Gallery has been involved. It was divided into two parts, the first devoted to the Woodland Indians, and the second to the Plains Indians. Because of the fragile nature of most of the objects, the exhibition entrance on the upper level of the East Building was built to reduce the natural light. In the first room the Woodland section opened with a two-sided case holding weapons of war mounted on a clear sheet of acrylic, which made the objects appear to "float" and allowed visitors to study them from either side. Wall cases and freestanding cases contained figures, smoking pipes, tools, and bowls. Large wall cases in the second gallery displayed turbans, bear claw necklaces, blankets, dress clothing, all stitched to fabric-covered "flats" that allowed the objects to travel in specially constructed cases and to be shown in predetermined case compositions. The Plains section began in the third gallery with displays of shields, feast bowls, clubs, coup sticks, elk antler quirts, parfleche, and a fabric winter count that recorded the history of an Indian community. Between the third and fourth galleries another double-sided case featured red stone smoking pipes and presentation tomahawks. Curved corners in the fourth room accommodated a large photomural, and three large cases exhibited early decorated clothing, beaded baby carriers, weapon cases, bags, and blanket strips. The fifth and final gallery contained three wall cases with clothing, blankets, and moccasins on display and two large freestanding cases with clothing and an extraordinary assemblage of feather bonnets, each mounted to allow for close study from all sides. A small audiovisual theater was included in the exhibition space to present the history of the Milford Chandler and Richard Pohrt collection from which the exhibition was drawn.
Education

The education division makes the National Gallery's collections and resources on the history of art as widely accessible as possible by providing art information and educational programs and materials to visitors of all ages and nationalities as well as to millions of people throughout this country and abroad. In 1992 the division produced a great number and variety of programs to accompany both the Gallery collections and temporary exhibitions; the combined efforts of the staff resulted in over 130,000 tours, programs, and publications, which reached an audience of more than 48,700,000 people.

ADULT PROGRAMS

Through tours and lectures, academic programs, and films, this department provides adult audiences with opportunities for intellectual enrichment. Some events are directed toward novice visitors, and others toward more experienced viewers. Several of the programs are multicultural in approach, both to include broader views of traditional material and to encourage greater attendance by diverse audiences. In fiscal year 1992 new audio tours, a printed walking tour, additional guided introductory tours, and special programs enabled 635,000 people to enjoy the collections. The department continued its survey of audiences, focusing on visitor demographics and evaluation of program quality. Survey results contribute to the Gallery's long-range planning.

Tours and Lectures: This section prepares and delivers a wide range of daily gallery tours and lectures free of charge to the general public. This year volunteer docents led several daily introductory tours of the West and East Buildings as well as introductory tours in French, Spanish, German, and Italian. Currently there are 104 docents volunteering with the department.

The lecturing staff offered tours of the permanent collection and all temporary exhibitions, short gallery talks on selected works of art, and several introductory programs on art appreciation for the novice visitor, including How to Look at an Altarpiece, Reading Portraiture, and The Artists' Choices. Because of the overwhelming demand for tours of Circa 1492, introductory lectures were scheduled regularly in the East Building auditorium. Three new audio tours of the permanent collection were produced: The Director's Tour, Impressionist and Post-Impressionist Paintings, and American Paintings. The department also presented a 24-session slide lecture survey of Western art and a series of eight lectures on the art and artists of some of the world's best-loved cities, including Venice, St. Petersburg, London, and Edinburgh. Two summer interns contributed lectures to this series. This section and its volunteers also offer tours by appointment for groups of adult visitors and VIPs.

Academic Programs: This section creates programs for both the general public and undergraduate and graduate students, including the Andrew W. Mellon Lectures in the Fine Arts, the Sunday lectures, and other special lectures, courses, and seminars. The 1991 Mellon lectures were given by Willibald Sauerlander on "Changing Faces: Art and Physiognomy: A History of Representing the Passions." Gallery seminars and public symposia were offered in conjunction with the Circa 1492, Bierstadt, El Jaleo, and Guercino exhibitions, and special lecture series were presented as part of the Circa 1492, Guercino, and Kollwitz shows. "Conversations with Artists VIII" this year featured Nancy Graves, also represented in the Graphicsstudio exhibition. The graduate lecturing fellowship program offered 50 gallery talks by this year's two fellows. The office organized numerous day-long meetings with Gallery staff for international museum professionals visiting through the USIA program.

The academic programs office also oversees summer internships and Internships in the Museum Profession for Minorities, both of which match students with various departments in the Gallery. This gives potential museum professionals an opportunity to gain practical working experience and to study a major collection of paintings and sculpture at first hand. The Gallery concluded its collaboration with the Spanish Ministry of Culture on a program of grants from The Circle of the National Gallery of Art, which this year enabled three Spanish museum professionals to pursue additional training here. All interns and fellows were offered weekly orientation sessions designed to familiarize them with all aspects of the Gallery.

Film Programs: The film program has two components: documentary films shown daily in support of both the permanent collection and temporary exhibitions; and weekend film series, often arranged by distinguished scholars, on topics that relate to exhibitions or film history. Each series consists of 10 to 30 films culled from archives, collectors, or distributors all over the world.

Brazilian Cinema Novo featured 14 programs on a Latin American film movement that achieved prominence in the late 1960s; many films in the series, which included classic works by Glauber Rocha and Nelson Pereira dos Santos, were lent to the Gallery by archives and museums in Brazil and Chile. Western Vistas, presented in conjunction with the Bierstadt exhibition, examined the use of landscape in Western movies; featuring a number of silent and early sound Westerns, this series included the Washington premiere of Raoul Walsh’s The Big Trail (1930), lent by the Museum of Modern Art film archive and introduced by William K. Everson. Carmen, a series of eight screen adaptations of the story by Prosper Mérimée, culminated in the presentation of the 1915 Cecil B. DeMille silent version, with live orchestral accompaniment under the direction of Gillian B. Anderson, music specialist for the Library of Congress and prominent film music historian. Lubitsch in Germany: 1914–1922 and How the Worker Lived, presented at the time of the Käthe Kollwitz exhibition, were both co-organized with the Goethe-Institut Washington and included a number of rare 35mm prints from the Bundesarchiv and the Deutsche Institut für Filmkunde. The Washington premiere of Cage/Cunningham was introduced by its director, Elliot Caplan; and the premiere of Wild Wheels (on American car art) was also introduced by its director, Harrod Blank. The Films of Andrzej Wajda, an extensive retrospective of works by Poland’s greatest director, was jointly organized with the Polish Ministry of Culture and Art, the Embassy of Poland, and Film Polski. On the last weekend of September, Mr. Wajda was present to discuss his films. A four-part lecture course, Decoding the Moving Image, offered viewers the opportunity to learn about film and filmmaking as an art form. This unit also helped prepare 37 radio talks and interviews to accompany the Sunday broadcasts of the National Gallery concerts on radio.

EXHIBITION PROGRAMS

The exhibition programs department provides interpretive materials to enhance Gallery visitors’ understanding and appreciation of works of art in special exhibitions. To reach a broad public, various materials are produced, including exhibition brochures, recorded tours, explanatory wall texts, and audiovisual programs. The staff also assists in planning exhibition-related programs such as documentary film series, teaching packets, family guides, lectures, performances, concerts, and demonstrations of artistic techniques.

The fiscal year commenced with a rich educational program offered for Circa 1492, including extensive wall texts, an illustrated booklet with a map and outline of the exhibition, and a separate map for visitors with disabilities. With the support of The Circle, the booklet was also made available in a large-print version and in French, German, Italian, Japanese, and Spanish translations. A recorded tour narrated by J. Carter Brown, then director of the National Gallery, was keyed to sections in the booklet to provide further information on areas of interest to visitors. A second recorded tour was geared toward children and made use of special sound effects. The department coordinated a two-day public symposium for Circa 1492 that featured ten eminent scholars and attracted capacity crowds.

Educational brochures were produced in regular and large-print versions for the Bierstadt, El Jaleo, and Guercino paintings exhibitions. More elaborate booklets, each supported by The Circle, were produced for The Saint Anne Altarpiece and Stieglitz in the Darkroom, with The Arcadia Foundation contributing generously toward publication of the latter. Recorded tours were produced for Bierstadt, Guer-cino, and Art of the American Indian Frontier. An audiovisual program screened continuously during Art of the American Indian described the formation of the collection on view.

The department prepared educational materials for 15 exhibitions in fiscal year 1992 and continued to respond regularly to requests for educational materials from museums, schools, and members of the public across the country.

EDUCATION MEDIA

This department produces original video and multi-image programs in a variety of media that cover special events as well as exhibitions and the collection. The office made broadcast-quality video documentation of the entire Circa 1492 exhibition, from which was drawn publicity footage as well as footage for an interactive educational program being developed by the Gallery. Other video projects included
"Conversations with Artists VIII" with Nancy Graves, the pipe ceremony and blessing of the Art of the American Indian Frontier exhibition, and installations of Miro's Personnage Gothique and Tony Smith's The Snake Is Out.

The office documented activities ranging from the docent education sessions to the annual volunteer awards program. It updated the Teacher Institute promotional program and revised the video transfer of the audiovisual program John Russell Pope: Architect of the National Gallery. Development was begun on ways to recreate slide lectures in video as well as on a video series on Renaissance painting techniques. Work was underway on a 30-minute video program, supported by The Bauman Foundation, based on the 1990 Van Dyck exhibition.

EDUCATION PUBLICATIONS

This department writes gallery guides for the collection, printed on two-sided panels and laminated for use by the pubic. This project, made possible by Knight Foundation, includes translation of the guides into French, German, Italian, Japanese, and Spanish. Work proceeded ahead of schedule during this fiscal year, with 23 new guides and 5 sets of translations completed for the West Building main floor galleries. The guides were evaluated by an outside consultant over the course of the year, and findings are being incorporated into the program.

The department also serves as the editorial and production arm of the education division. This year the office coordinated production of three teaching packets on works in the collection, including illustrated booklets, timelines, slides, and color reproductions for classroom use; two teaching packets on special exhibitions; materials for docent training and in-house teacher workshops; calendars, brochures, and walking tours of the permanent collection for adults and children.

EDUCATION RESOURCES

This department is composed of two sections—art information and extension programs—serving visitors at art information desks in the National Gallery as well as audiences of all ages across the nation and abroad through extension programs and other educational resources.

Art Information: Six professional staff members recruit, train, and supervise over 140 art information volunteers, who serve at the five art information desks at the entrances to the East and West Buildings. Volunteers are on duty at these locations during all of the Gallery’s public hours, providing an average of 1,400 hours of service per month. These volunteers receive ongoing instruction from the staff on the Gallery’s collections and exhibitions as well as special training in answering questions posed by the public. Staff specialists and volunteers responded to an average of 7,800 visitor questions and 700 telephone inquiries per week—an all-time high. The staff also responded to a broad array of inquiries that required special research; in fiscal year 1992 a total of 2,462 replies were prepared in response to questions on works of art and artists. Averaging over 200 queries a month, the year’s total exceeds last year’s by 25 percent.

Department staff prepared a new Brief Guide and Plan for the Gallery, which provides summary information about the museum as well as color-coded isometric floor plans of the East and West Buildings. This new publication has been well received by the public, and an average of more than 43,000 copies a month are distributed from the art information desks. Staff are also coordinating a yearlong survey of Gallery visitors concerning their use of resources and programs offered by the Gallery; a corps of trained volunteers pretested the questionnaire and are helping staff carry out the survey.

Extension Programs: This section oversees nationwide distribution of extension programs—color slide programs, teaching packets, films, and videocassettes—based on the Gallery’s collections and exhibitions. Extension programs are used in schools, libraries, colleges and universities, civic organizations, and by public and educational television stations in the U.S. and overseas.

Borrower reports indicate that in this fiscal year extension programs’ viewing audience was 44,949,419. For the first time, use of program materials by individual public and instructional television stations within the affiliate distribution system outstripped the broadcast activity of national educational networks. Commercial acquisition of The Learning Channel (formerly Appalachian Community Service Network) has greatly diminished use of Gallery materials by this onetime major national outlet for our programs. During fiscal year 1992 the total of all program presentations was 120,821. Videocassette distribution remained an important segment of total program use, surpassing film distribution for the first time.

Within the overall audience, organizations across the country using extension programs through the affiliate long-term loan system sustained a high level of program use. These borrowers—in school systems, instructional media centers, libraries, universities, other educational settings—as well as borrowers using materials on short-term direct loans report showing programs many times on a single order. In the past fiscal year 43 organizations joined the affiliate system, most notably the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP), whose distinct and large national constituency greatly enhances the dimensions of current audiences. At present, 12 extension program titles—10 of them in closed caption format—are available on a free-loan basis through AARP to their affiliates and related organizations serving mature audiences. In an eight-month period beginning in January 1992 viewers using Gallery programs via AARP were reported at well over 75,000 persons.

A new, updated catalogue describes the full inventory of extension program resources available. In addition, this year arrangements were made to include the complete listing of extension programs in the National Distance Learning Center database, which provides on-line information about the Gallery’s instructional resources to educators in 47 states and 4 countries. The department continues to provide extension programs to U.S. embossies abroad through USIA as well as to USIS libraries around the world. In addition, WORLDNET, USIA’s satellite television network, used a series of 11 programs for 4 worldwide transmissions to receiving stations in 135 countries in Latin America, Western Europe, Africa, the Middle East, and South Asia. The entire inventory of program offerings was used by Department of Defense schools in the Pacific region and by military installations in the U.S., Europe, and in Asia. The department’s film, The Landscapes of Frederic Edwin Church, was screened in connection with the Montreal film festival, and David Smith: American Sculptor was shown at the Centre Pompidou in Paris.

Department staff, with assistance of digital imaging and other specialists, continued production of the Gallery’s second videodisc, supported by The Annenberg Foundation, focusing on the collection of American paintings, sculpture, drawings, prints, and the Index of American Design. An extensive digital archive of images and a complex database of information about the works of art are being created as the basis for this videodisc—the first time ever that electronic images and computer-based media have been used as the source for a videodisc.

Art & Man, published by Scholastic, Inc., in cooperation with the Gallery, was renamed Scholastic Art this year. Department staff continued to work with the editors in reviewing content for this magazine, which is used in secondary schools across the nation. Such diverse artists as Michelangelo, Frida Kahlo, and Maria Martinez were among those featured in this year’s issues. Subscription levels were maintained at 200,000.

TEACHER AND SCHOOL PROGRAMS
This department serves teachers, school-age children, and their families through tours, programs, and publications. Approximately 130 volunteer school program docents, trained by the professional staff, gave 2,860 tours to approximately 50,000 school children this year; and 16 new volunteers accepted into the program completed an extensive education course that included lectures, gallery discussions, and tour techniques.

The Bauman Foundation and The Circle funded a survey of art museum-based teacher programs and the resulting directory, which will be distributed free-of-charge to museum professionals, teachers, and teacher resource centers across the country. This directory of Teacher Programs in Art Museums lists more than 260 museums offering programs or resources for teachers.

A grant from the Geraldine R. Dodge Foundation was pledged to sponsor a national conference on art museum-based teacher programs taking place at the beginning of the 1993 fiscal year.

The National Teacher Institute, in its fourth year, offered three sessions. Primary and secondary school teachers from across the country participated in this six-day program. Local teachers, advisors, and principals as well as national education experts provided valuable feedback this year during local and national advisory committee meetings. Support for the program has been provided by the William Randolph Hearst Foundation.

The teacher workshop program, also in its fourth year, offers instruction, enrichment, and resources to area educators. This year the Gallery organized 11 workshops, one of which was held twice to accommodate high demand, and one special evening event. Overall the program saw a substantial increase in registration to 760 participants. The number of teacher inservices also doubled from last year to serve over 400 teachers, largely because of the popularity of the Circa 1492 exhibition.

Two special high school days were organized in conjunction with Circa 1492. Approximately 250 students from the District of Columbia and surrounding counties participated in these Circle-funded events, which featured artists’ demonstrations, a slide overview, a recorded tour of the exhibition, and a viewing of the film Masters of Illusion.

A pilot high school seminar, planned in coordination with Duke Ellington High School in the District, brought 14 area students to the Gallery on eight Saturday mornings last winter. Students had behind-the-scenes tours, gallery discussions, and lectures. Working with their sponsoring teachers, each student completed a final project and presented it at an awards reception. Participating teachers and curriculum supervisors were from Duke Ellington; Suitland High School and Laurel High School in Prince George’s County; Watkins Mill High School, Montgomery County; Centennial High School and Mount Hebron High School in Howard County; T.C. Williams High School, Alexandria; and J.E.B. Stuart High School, Fairfax.

The Circa 1492 family event, underwritten by The Circle, was the first such program held in conjunction with a special exhibition, and it attracted more than 500 students from D.C. public high schools and their families. Other family programs included “Great Landscapes,” held in conjunction with the Bierstadt exhibition, and “Stories and Symbols,” held in conjunction with Art of the American Indian Frontier, which served 931 participants through 17 events.

Outreach to the D.C. community continued through the Chapter One Museum Project, which brought 779 “at risk” public school students to the Gallery for multiple-visit tours. The department also continued to work with the Cultural Consortium, comprised of many of the city’s cultural organizations, to encourage community participation in Gallery programs and events.

The department completed the first three in a series of teaching packets on the permanent collection entitled The Inquiring Eye: American Painting, French Impressionism and Post-Impressionism, and The European Renaissance, the latter made possible in part by The Folger Fund. They were initiated to complement the National Teacher Institute. Teaching packets were also published for special exhibitions Circa 1492 and Art of the American Indian Frontier, along with a family guide for Circa 1492.

A grant from the Vira I. Heinz Endowment has enabled the Gallery to begin publishing a series of self guides for families and children, Portraits and Personalities, published in September 1992 as the first in the series, focuses on the West Building: Shapes and Patterns, to be published in the next fiscal year, focuses on the design of the East Building; and a guide to highlights in the permanent collection will follow, The Magic Picture Frame, an activities book for children that is based on the permanent collection, will also be available in 1994.

The Smithsonian Institution’s internship project with the District and the Foxfire Foundation concluded with the publication of A Guide for Teachers: African American Art Resources in the Washington, DC, Area. Written by Ursula Sherard, intern at both the Gallery and the National Museum of American Art, the guide was distributed to 100 teachers who attended the teacher workshop “African American Artists” co-organized by the Gallery and NMAA.

Library

The National Gallery library continued to serve both in-house colleagues and a growing number of outside readers, both in person and by telephone or mail. Visitors came from art galleries, libraries, and universities, but also from local government agencies such as the Department of State, the Supreme Court, and the Coast Guard as well as from Monticello, the Arena Stage, the American Association of Retired Persons, and the Canadian, Greek, Mexican, and Swiss embassies. The Circa 1492 exhibition attracted an unusually large number of overseas scholars, including readers from Australia, England, Italy, Nigeria, Poland, Portugal, Scotland, and Turkey.

Reader services staff compiled an informative brochure for visiting scholars and students. In addition, interlibrary loan activity reached unprecedented levels this year, surpassing previous usage by 32 percent. The rise in demand for borrowed materials from the National Gallery library also increased. These increases may be attributable to the soaring cost of new publications.

The tremendous generosity of donors to the National Gallery library is thus all the more remarkable. Almost a third of the items added to the collection are gifts, for which we are extremely grateful. Patricia G. England added 241 modern fine press and artists’ books to her earlier gifts, bringing the number of works in the England collection to more than 300; this gift was celebrated with an illustrated lecture and exhibition. Hélaine D. Bhum gave a large and important group of early 20th-century German titles on aesthetics and art theory. Mrs. John A. Pope continues to add to an impressive collection of art in the United States; an address before the Artists’ Fund Society of Philadelphia (Philadelphia, 1984); Lambert Bidloo, Parapeticon batasum... (Amsterdam, 1720); Cornelis de Bie, Faenza Werkgale der Nederlandtse Poesie (Mechelen, 1670); Giuseppe Gaetano Bolletti, Dell’ origine e de’ progressi dell’ Instituto delle scienze de Bologna (Bologna, 1769); Iacopo Alessandro Calvi, Versi e prose sopra una serie di eccellenti pitture (Bologna, 1780); George Catlin, The lifed and subsided rocks of America with their influence on the oceanic, atmospheric, and land currents (London, 1870); George Catlin, Shut your mouth and save your life (London, 1870); Jean Cousin, Livre de pourtraicture (Paris, c. 1490–1560); L’art de dessiner proprement les plans, profilis, elevations geometrales, & perspectives, soit de’architecture militaire ou civile... The National Gallery’s first gifts and partial purchases of minimal and conceptual art from the Dorothy and Herbert Vogel Collection brought to the library a plethora of ephemeral material documenting the artists represented. This material has been integrated into the vertical files, and individual artist files have been made accessible through VTLS, the library’s in-house automated system. Vertical files and circulation departments, experiencing substantial growth in usage, have been ably assisted by volunteers and by students in a “stay-in-school” program. In fact, greater numbers of volunteers have been working in all areas of the library.

Together with the J. Paul Getty Center for the History of Art, the library acquisitions staff have been working since last year to develop the Provenance Index Databases. The resulting data will become an integral part of a continuing series entitled The Index of Paintings Sold in the British Isles during the Nineteenth Century. The acquisitions section also produced 3,448 bibliographic records of the backlog books and made available on SCIPIO the entire auction catalogues holdings from the Chester Dale Collection.

The cataloguing section organized and catalogued papers from the John Marin family. These consisted chiefly of autograph correspondence from 1920 to 1970 between Marin and other important figures in American art of the period, including Ansel Adams, Dorothy Norman, Georgia O’Keeffe, Duncan and Marjorie Phillips, Alfred Stieglitz, and Paul Strand. The condition of many fragile items had to be stabilized. The section also produced the library’s first detailed finding aid for manuscripts in the collection.

Library automation capabilities increased substantially this year. A new Hewlett-Packard 3000 Model 957 improved response time for all users and allowed expansion of the library system to incorporate all 90,000 of the machine-readable records in the photographic archives department. Photographic and bibliographic source information is now available to all users of the system, and the complete database will be accessible in the near future. The next phase of development will incorporate the slide library into the system. Since all three divisions are using a MARC format, the same search commands may be used to retrieve information. Circulation of slides and photographs will be possible with the use of barcodes attached to each item.

Library staff were given advanced training in the use of the automated system this year, which covered specialized searching and cataloguing techniques as well as bibliographic and reporting services. Instruction materials are being revised and enhanced, and additional training will soon be available for Gallery staff.

Five library exhibits were installed: African American Artists, by Rita Cacas; Patricia G. England Collection, by Neal Turtell; 400 Years of Women Artists, by Kate Allen; Barcelona Art and Architecture, by Caroline Backlund; and Emblemata and Dutch Art, by Arthur Wheelock.

PHOTOTGRAPHIC ARCHIVES

The photographic archives continued to acquire photographs and microform images in a broad range of areas, bringing the total number of photographs in the collection to 1,338,427, and the total number of microforms to 4,873,882.
Purchases included photographs of Italian, German, Spanish, and Netherlandish paintings in the Wadsworth Atheneum and, through the Courtauld Institute, several major British private collections never before photographed. An exchange of photographs was begun with the Robert Lehman Archive of Italian majolica at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, using our Parke-Bernet Galleries negatives. The Gallery also continued to print photographs of Russian architecture from negatives loaned by William Brumfield, and our collection, among the largest in the world, now numbers more than 7,000 images.

The archives this year acquired two of the first auction catalogues to be illustrated with photographs. These documented sales held at Christie, Manson & Woods in 1860 and 1864, and illustrated lots include paintings, sculpture, and objects now in major public collections. Interestingly, the format for illustrating sales catalogues has not changed in the past 130 years. Other works purchased at auction were an album of English and Scottish architectural views by Russell
Sedgfield, George Washington Wilson, and James Valentine and a very rare two-volume set of the Gems of the Art Treasures Exhibition, Manchester, 1857, with photographs by Caldesi and Montecchi, dedicated to His Royal Highness Prince Albert. The purchase of a rare, deluxe commemorative edition of 24 photographs by Neurdein Freres that documents the Exposition Universelle of 1900 supplements a volume of photogravures of the same world’s fair already in the collection.

Microform acquisitions included a useful compilation of Pictures in National Trust Properties, Great Britain (Bath, England, 1992), with an artist and location index. The Gallery also began to acquire images of the holdings of the Deutsche Fototheek der Sachsischen Landesbibli-othek, Dresden, which will augment our holdings of the complete collection of the Marburger Index.

The Gallery received a variety of images through the continued generosity of the Samuel H. Kress Foundation and its photography subventions. The founda-tion’s support of one researcher’s field work in southern France and northern Italy led to the Gallery’s acquisition of a unique set of photographs of all of the extant works of the 15th-century itinerant artist-priest, Giovanni Canavesio. An ongoing Kress Foundation grant enabled the Gallery to receive extraordinary photographs of baroque church architecture in the Piedmont.

The department also initiated photo-documentation of the art collection at the Howard University Gallery of Art after discovering that it owned a dozen paintings given by the Kress Foundation in the 1940s. Howard’s collection embraces 19th-century European porcelain, contemporary ceramics, European and American paintings, African American paintings and graphics, as well as tapis-

The photographic archives received a remarkable gift this year from art historian René Huyghe, who was the Kress Professor at the National Gallery in 1967–1968. Professor Huyghe offered the archives his working collection of photographs, clippings, cuts, postcards, and so on, covering all aspects of art and the fine arts, ancient through modern. This gift appears to consist of between 40,000 and 50,000 images, and it will beautifully supplement the main body of the photo archives collections.

The department’s database went online with the library’s VTLS computer system in fiscal year 1992. After some additional modifications, our authority files and image records will be accessible to any office in the Gallery, a major step toward possibly making records accessible to other institutions.

SLIDE LIBRARY

Gregory P. J. Most, formerly of the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston, was appointed chief slide librarian this year to oversee a collection of more than 143,000 catalogued slides. Of these, more than 3,000 were catalogued during the past year, and more than 22,000 were circulated to Gallery staff and the public. Borrowing by the public accounted for 22 percent of all circulation. Groundwork was begun for adding slide information to the library’s automated catalogue in the next fiscal year, which will make slide information available through terminals located throughout the Gallery.

Special emphasis has been placed this year on acquiring images of architecture and outdoor sculpture. The library purchased several slide sets of sculpture parks, principally in the U.S. but also in Europe and Japan, while expanding and upgrading slides of American art and architecture. As a first step in systematically representing the collections of American museums, the slide library also acquired slides representative of the collections of the Art Institute of Chicago, the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston, and the Menil Collection.

Editors Office

The editors office collaborated with other Gallery offices and with trade and academic publishers to produce a wide range of publications that reflect the Gallery’s collections and programs. Nine exhibition catalogues were published, along with a new summary catalogue of American paintings in the collection, three volumes of Studies in the History of Art (vols. 29, 32, and 36) and numerous educational publications. Substantial progress was made toward the publication of several volumes in the systematic catalogue of the collections, catalogues of the Mark J. Millard Collection of architectural books, additional volumes of Studies, as well as forthcoming exhibition catalogues. The staff also produced myriad brochures, pamphlets, invitations, flyers, announcements, advertisements, staff newsletters, the Circle bulletin, and the annual report.

Exhibition-related publications this year included the catalogues Guercino: Drawings from Windsor Castle and Guercino: Master Painter of the Baroque; Walker Evans: Subways and Streets; John Singer Sargent’s “El Jaleo”; Dürer to Diebenkorn: Recent Acquisitions of Art on Paper; Käthe Kollwitz; French, German, and English editions of Ellsworth Kelly: The Years in France; and The Architecture of the West Building of the National Gallery of Art. There were brochures for seven exhibitions: for Circa 1492, in six languages, in a large-type version, and in a version describing facilities for visitors with disabilities; also for “The Saint Anne Altarpiece” by Gerard David; Stieglitz in the Darkroom; Watson and the Shark; and standard and large-type brochures for Albert Bierstadt; El Jaleo; and Guercino.

Press kit folders, press invitations, object labels, and wall texts were prepared for each exhibition.

The third and fourth volumes in the systematic catalogue, British Paintings and American Naive Paintings, are in the final stages of production, with delivery projected for early fiscal year 1993. Other volumes now in production include German Paintings and Western Decorative Arts, Part I. Six volumes of Studies in the History of Art are soon to be published. Other publications produced under the aegis of CASVA included Center 11, Center 12, and Sponsored Research 11.

Non-exhibition-related booklets were many and varied, from The Art of Art Criticism for the information office to George Catlin for the National Lending Service; a special report for the financial officers of the Museum Presidents Group; and The Evolution of Seventeenth-Century Emblematic Literature in the Netherlands to accompany a library exhibition. Publications produced for the education department included The Age of Lorenzo de’ Medici; two teaching packets for temporary exhibitions; three teaching packets on works in the collection; “I Am Still Learning,” a brochure on masterpieces created by artists in their old age; and 18
Guercino's Intervention of the Sabine Women, 1645, was lent by the Musée du Louvre, Paris, for the exhibition of Guercino's paintings.

Laminated gallery guides in several languages.

Copublications with trade publishers and distributors remain an important conduit for the Gallery's outreach to the public beyond the nation's capital. Yale, Abrams, Thames & Hudson, Yohan-Western, Prestel, te Neues, and Schirmer/Mosel participated in these ventures this year.

IMAGING AND VISUAL SERVICES

This department was renamed during the year as a way of demonstrating the Gallery's commitment to new technologies. The department continues to perform two distinct but related functions. The office of visual services coordinates photographic requests from both Gallery staff and the public. The laboratory produces traditional photographic images in four... studios, two printing darkrooms, a color duplicating lab, and a black and white archival darkroom. The photographic laboratory joined the Kodak “Q-Lab” system this year, which will help monitor color processing to produce more consistently faithful color transparencies and slides. Recently a high resolution scanner and a high-end IBM personal computer were installed for the purpose of digitizing images in the Gallery’s collections. These images will eventually be incorporated into the collection management system and will be available for other programs.

The office of visual services provides color transparencies, slides, and black and white photographs to staff as well as outside scholars, visitors, other museums and institutions, and publishers. It authorizes reproductions of works of art in the Gallery collections and coordinates all requests for work performed by the photographic laboratory. The office also obtains photographs and transparencies of works of art to be loaned for special exhibitions, coordinating the needs of Gallery departments as well as other museums participating in these exhibitions. The office recently set up a computer network to make files accessible at all department workstations. A contracts system that incorporates seven databases was designed by a member of the staff to produce contracts for reproductions of works of art by various types of publications.

The laboratory responded to photographic needs of Gallery staff in support of an increasing number of programs and projects this year. Photography for the Rothko catalogue raisonné was completed, as was color photography for the systematic catalogue of Chinese porcelains. Photography is essential to several conservation research techniques—including infrared reflectography, which requires the printing of large numbers of small black and white photographs—and the conservation department remains the largest consumer of photographic services. The information office, too, requires quantities of photographs and transparencies, often under very tight deadlines to meet the demands of the press. The support of special exhibitions involves photography at several levels, including catalogues, condition reports, publicity, and slides for lectures and curatorial study. Every painting in the Bierstadt exhibition, for example, was photographed for overall and detail slides.

In fiscal year 1992 the office of visual services added 19,334 black and white photographs and 5,061 color transparencies to the files, issued 1,632 permissions for reproduction, lent 1,380 transparencies for reproduction, sold 1,236 black and white photographs and 524 duplicate slides to the public, and supplied 2,423 color transparencies and 6,948 black and white photographs to Gallery staff for official use. Responding to 3,467 requests for photography, the laboratory produced 7,924 black and white negatives, 46,879 black and white prints, 28,544 35mm slides, 8,916 color transparencies, 1,752 color negatives, and processed 616 rolls of color film for other departments.

Gallery Archives

During the year significant progress was made to ensure that records documenting the history and development of the National Gallery and its buildings are protected and preserved and made available for research use.

The oral history program received an important grant from The Circle of the National Gallery of Art, which enabled consulting oral historian A. C. Viebranz to interview Warren Burger, Clement Conger, Kay Silberfeld, John Stevenson, and John Wilmerding. Oral historian Anne Ritchie also conducted interviews with E. James Adams, David Bull, Elise Ferber, Bill Mann, S. Dillon Ripley, Adolph W. Schmidt, and Sir Francis Watson. The oral history program is guided by an advisory committee consisting of Richard Bales, Elizabeth Croog, John Hand, Joseph Krakora, William Moss, and Frances Smyth.

Gallery Archives holdings were significantly augmented during the year by a number of important acquisitions. Richard Bales donated several documents of exceptional historical interest that relate to his career as music director of the National Gallery. Twenty photographs of the Gallery’s installation of the Morton Neumann collection were received from the archives of the Art Institute of Chicago. East Building construction manager Bill Mann made available for copying his extraordinary collection of slides, which documents every facet of building construction. The Foundation for Documents of Architecture donated extensive files covering discussions and recommendations of the Architectural Drawings Advisory Group. In addition, the National Gallery’s office of visual services transferred more than 500 historical photographs of the Gallery; approximately 1,000 documents relating to the collection of Ailsa Mellon Bruce were transferred from curatorial records and files; and significant records were received from the offices of the director, deputy director, secretary and general counsel, curators, public information, education, exhibitions, external affairs, corporate relations, and special events.

Architectural records were given particular attention, as archival staff developed and refined operation of a comprehensive database of architectural drawings. Entries were completed for all drawings of original West Building construction, and specialized searches and reports relating to the more than 4,000 entries in the system are now possible. Architectural models in archival holdings were identified and catalogued. In addition, Charles Tompkins Company office files and shop drawings that document construction of the East Building were transferred to new archival boxes, and operation and maintenance manuals and specification books were organized and inventoried. Nearly 200 conceptual sketches for the East Building from the office of I. M. Pei were placed in individual, lightweight enclosures for protection and preservation.

Archival holdings of architectural records were used extensively for studies of the design and development of the Gallery’s buildings and for student projects. Numerous drawings were made available for Gallery renovation projects and for development of the Gallery’s computer-aided design and drafting (CADD) system.

An increasing number of scholarly researchers used the archives for investigations into a wide variety of other subjects, from biographies of individuals such as Andrew Mellon, Chester Dale, Lessing Rosenwald, and I. M. Pei to historical topics such as the role of museums during World War II, travels of the Mona Lisa, development of the Gulbenkian Collection, and the history of museum exhibition installation in the U.S. Researchers also used the archives for information relating to the Gallery’s own acquisitions, exhibitions, and programs.

Archival staff provided information and advice concerning management of archival and oral history programs and operation of archival databases to a number of institutions and individuals in the U.S. and abroad. Supported in part by a grant from the Getty Art History Information Program, the Gallery Archives also hosted the annual meeting of the International Council on Archives working group on architectural records. Working sessions were attended by representatives of archives in Belgium, Canada, France, Great Britain, Italy, Poland, Portugal, Spain, and the U.S.

Present and former Gallery staff and friends joined in mourning architectural archivist Richard E. Saito, who died on 25 October 1991. Saito joined the staff of the National Gallery in 1969 and in 1984 was appointed founding architectural archivist in the Gallery Archives.
Protection Services

This division provides 24-hour protection and security for the National Gallery’s art collections and facilities as well as for 1,100 employees and the millions of visitors who come to the Gallery each year. Jurisdiction over the National Sculpture Garden site just west of the West Building was transferred from the National Park Service to the Gallery in 1991; in 1992 the Gallery requested and received from Congress an extension of its special police authority to cover that property.

Joseph Maddox became the division’s training officer this year, responsible for defining, developing, improving, and sustaining quality training for the protection staff. Four new first-level supervisors completed a 40-hour core course, 34 officers completed the basic museum security course, 44 officers completed advanced security training, 71 officers completed CPR and first-aid training, and 56 officers attended fire arms training. A database was developed to maintain training records for the entire division.

James Thompson filled another key position as day shift captain, responsible for supervising the daily activities of the uniformed security officers. He shares this responsibility with Captain Nathaniel McLin, who is in charge of evening shifts. To improve the effectiveness of security staff, a new organizational structure has been established: three teams, each supervised by a lieutenant, are made up of five smaller teams, each supervised by a sergeant. This year Sergeant Jerome Edwards was promoted to the rank of lieutenant; and officers Bernard Clemens, Dona Lidner, Karen Perry, Anthony Thompson, and Raymond Watson were promoted to sergeant.

Coordinating closely with the State Department, Secret Service, FBI, and various law enforcement organizations, the Gallery oversaw protection for around 100 VIP visitors this year, including the president and vice president of the U.S. and other heads of state and dignitaries.

Important organizational changes this year included formation of a special department to develop and direct a comprehensive fire, safety, occupational health, and environmental protection program for the Gallery. This office instituted daily safety inspections to ensure compliance with NFPA fire and life safety codes, EPA and NIOSH environmental laws, and OSHA safety and health standards. The office also developed procedures to minimize accidents and injuries for staff, visitors, and contractors; assumed responsibility for workers’ compensation; and coordinated a contract with the U.S. Public Health Service to provide professional staff for the Gallery’s occupational health unit. A long-range plan was written to improve fire protection for employees, visitors, and the Gallery’s collections. Checkroom positions were designated as security posts this year and placed under the supervision of the office of protection services. The technical services department continued work on major enhancements to the security system in the Gallery; improvements this year were made in access control, keying systems, and detection alarms.

Publications Sales

The publications sales division continued to offer a broad selection of exhibition catalogues, books, and reproductions of works of art, produced in collaboration with curatorial, editorial, and product development staff. Sales were very strong this year, aided in part by the popularity of Circa 1492. Visitors purchased more than 200,000 catalogues and other art books and more than 2 million printed reproductions, including postcards, note cards, greeting cards, posters, and framed and unframed reproductions.

More than 500,000 visitors were served in the sales shops. Best-selling catalogues were Circa 1492, Bierstadt, El Jaleo, and Käthe Kollwitz. Although temporary exhibitions contribute notably to overall sales, the program’s strength continues to be in the broad presentation of works from the Gallery’s permanent collections. More than 700 works of art are reproduced on postcards, and more than 400 on large and small reproductions. Both the quantity and quality of these publications are unsurpassed by any art museum in the world. This program is integral to the Gallery’s educational mission.

Gallery bookstores continue to be recognized as an excellent source for books on all aspects of art and architecture. Inquiries are received from all over the world. Book sales accounted for almost one-fourth of the income for the year. As in the past, this income supports the sales program and provides funds for the publication of exhibition catalogues and other scholarly works on the history of art.

The division operates permanent sales shops on the ground floor of the West Building and on the concourse level between the East and West Buildings. This year lighting was improved throughout the concourse area, where the bookstore was expanded to offer a larger selection of children’s books related to art and the Gallery’s collections. The new display increased sales of these books by 20 percent. In addition, temporary sales desks were set up near the Circa 1492, Bierstadt, and Guercino exhibitions for the convenience of visitors.

The publications sales division continued to pursue licensing agreements in commercial markets worldwide for note cards, posters, greeting cards, puzzles, bookmarks, and postcards manufactured under Gallery supervision for sale in Gallery shops. These licensing arrangements give broader exposure to the Gallery’s collections and generate additional revenue for the ongoing support of publications activities.

Gallery Architect

The architect’s office strives to provide functional working environments for the Gallery and to ensure that modifications of public spaces are made with respect for the aesthetic quality of the buildings. In consultation with other Gallery offices, the architects and interior designer program, design, prepare construction documents, and coordinate construction through completion and occupancy.

Architectural projects completed in fiscal year 1992 include consolidated silk-screen laboratories; redesigned offices for the registrar, horticulturist, and resource acquisition staff; and improvements to the audiovisual facilities. The 50th Anniversary Gift Committee inscription panels were installed in the Founders’ Room area. Major renovations to the main loading dock—including the addition of a leveler and a large platform lift to allow horizontal movement from truck beds of any height—will accommodate large tractor trailers and improve the Gallery’s ability to handle art and other goods received. Movement of art within the Connecting Link was also enhanced with the installation of oversized doors.

On the National Sculpture Garden site west of the West Building—bounded by Constitution Avenue, Madison Drive, 7th Street, and 9th Street—pavement was removed to preserve two concentric rings of linden trees that surround the pool and skating rink.

Improving access, facilities, and graphics for visitors with disabilities is a priority for the National Gallery. Designs are underway for permanent stone ramps at the 6th Street and Constitution Avenue entrance to the West Building, and clearer directional graphics at the public entrances are in progress. An automatic teller machine that complies with requirements of the Americans with Disabilities Act has been installed in the Connecting Link. Other related improvements are being carefully assessed.

Significant interior design projects completed this year included the repair and reupholstering of the original sofas designed by John Russell Pope in the West Building galleries and the refinishing and repainting of the Founders’ Room. Other accomplishments included the design and reinstallation of furnishings in the East Building’s library reading room, replacement of the West Building garden court draperies, and office furnishings for the new director, director emeritus, deputy treasurer, chief registrar, chief slide librarian, automation librarian, retail manager, and education auditorium programs office. Systems furnishings were installed for the resource acquisition office and are being designed for the offices of publications sales and protection services.

Much progress has been made on the computer-aided design and drafting (CADD) system initiated last year. Information collected from original construction drawings and subsequent renovation projects has been used to form a database of the Gallery’s architectural plans. This database of the existing physical plant will offer a coherent, easily accessible, and up-to-date graphic record for many ongoing architectural and planning projects. The system has already been used to create three-dimensional images and architectural drawings for several selected projects. Through a networking program the expanded uses of the CADD system will include space management, furniture inventory, utility locations, and facilities management.

Remodeling of the education offices is underway to improve workstation privacy and accommodate a larger staff. Also under construction are expanded and redesigned quarters for the office of protection services to accommodate the recent staff reorganization and technical security changes. Other projects being designed for construction in fiscal year 1993 include remodeled offices for the secretary and general counsel, editors, payroll, accounting, and publications sales. Design work in progress includes a new office for the curator of photographs, a new frame conservation laboratory, and modifications in the painting and paper conservation laboratories.

A major project currently in design is the replacement of approximately 3.5 acres of skylights and roofing and 40,000 square feet of laylights over main level galleries and public areas in the West Building. This undertaking, to be phased over five years, will reduce light intensity in the galleries to conserve both art and energy but will maintain the color spectrum as close to natural light as possible. Architects designing the project have nearly completed an exhaustive survey of existing skylight and roofing, structural, HVAC, electrical, and fire and safety systems. The preliminary report with design recommendations and cost projections is expected in fiscal year 1993.

Facilities Management

This division continued to provide quality maintenance and services for the Gallery facilities while working to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of building operations. The energy conservation program had another banner year, with even greater savings than in past years. Gallery-wide lighting systems continue to be retrofitted with high efficiency fixtures and lamps to improve lighting levels while reducing costs. A state-of-the-art automation system, now in the final stages of design, will enhance these conservation efforts. Through automation of environmental controls, the operating staff will be able to diagnose and resolve temperature and humidity problems in the galleries.
and to review climate conditions for any gallery at any time.

Department staff worked with the architect's office on many renovation projects and supported the external affairs office by setting up for 169 special events. Collectively, the work control center and facilities management staff responded to more than 10,000 work orders from other Gallery offices.

Resource Acquisition

The resource acquisition division processed 30 major contracts this year, for a total of more than $4.5 million. The division also handled more than 8,500 purchase requests, creating more than 5,000 purchase orders for over 1,800 vendors.

The procurement office purchased new computer hardware and software that will enable staff to prepare solicitation and contract documents more efficiently through a local area network that integrates an automated Federal Acquisitions Regulation with a word processing program. The office is developing individual training plans for contract specialists, procurement clerks, and purchasing agents on the staff with the goal of full certification. The staff this year overhauled vendor files, simplified purchasing system details, and completed a yearly update of the procedures manual to include a new protocol on the use of vendor quotes and development of reports for tracking work and managing workloads.

The supply office completed a guide to assist Gallery staff in obtaining supply services. It also increased control and accountability of property and equipment within administrative departments and inventoried all capital equipment as well as 85 percent of property valued between $1,000 and $5,000. The supply store was completely inventoried and reorganized, and limits were placed on personnel authorized to obtain expendable items for official use.

Personnel Office

Meredith Weiser joined the Gallery this year as the head of labor, employee relations, and training. After taking a survey to identify topics on which supervisors would like more information, she established a forum to provide instruction on such subjects as training, performance management, attendance and disciplinary problems, and awards. As part of the Gallery's commitment to provide training, the top three levels of management participated in a full-day management course. The Gallery also conducted two-hour mandatory training for the entire staff on the prevention of HIV/AIDS.

Equal Employment Opportunity Office

This office was established as a separate department last year, with Rita Cacas as the first full-time EEO specialist; other staff who assist with the program on a collateral duty basis include an EEO officer and four EEO counselors. The office has a dual mission: first, to prevent discrimination and resolve conflicts in early stages; and second, to help the Gallery achieve a work force that reflects the nation's diversity and assume a leadership role in efforts to increase the diversity of the museum professional and administrative communities. This office supports the Gallery's Federal Women's Program, the Hispanic Employment Program, the Selective Placement Program for employment of individuals with disabilities, and the Student Mentoring Programs designed to attract minority professionals. The Gallery's Affirmative Employment Plan, an annual report submitted to the EEOC, measures progress against goals the Gallery has established for its EEO program. It also reports the status of federal women and minorities with regard to hiring, promotion, training, and career mobility; and it provides specific actions for management to take to eliminate barriers. The Gallery has shown a strong commitment to diversifying its professional and administrative work force in Kathe Kollwitz, Municipal Shelter, 1926, private collection, was among the prints in the Kollwitz exhibition recent years. Significant progress has been made in recruiting African Americans and Asian Americans, and the minority internship program has been a major vehicle for providing minority graduates with professional opportunities within the Gallery.

Mandatory EEO training for upper level managers and supervisors emphasized their responsibilities for Gallery EEO initiatives as well as their obligations and protections under EEO laws. Mandatory training for all staff clarified the Gallery's policy on the prevention of sexual harassment.

With the passage of the Americans with Disabilities Act, the Gallery undertook a comprehensive review of its facilities and developed a list of actions to be taken to improve accessibility for its visitors with disabilities. In general, the Gallery was found to have very few problems, and funds have been set aside to address these needs.
Office Services

The office services division this year implemented a new financial tracking system that makes it possible to inform each Gallery department of its postage and transportation use as well as the cost of these services. The division also purchased a computerized mail processor that significantly increases the efficiency of stamping, sorting, and sealing envelopes. To improve use of the Gallery’s vehicles, the office began systems for reservations, maintenance, tracking, and computerized updating of government licenses. The transportation staff fulfilled around 3,200 transportation/courier requests during the year.

Telecommunications

Budget tracking systems instituted this year identified options for reducing both telecommunications rates and usage, with the result that budget increases will not be necessary in the near future to cover the Gallery’s expanded telecommunications services.

Audiovisual Services

This department provides high-quality technical support for the Gallery’s films, lectures, audiovisual programs, recorded tours, musical performances, special events, and press conferences. It also staffs and maintains the technical systems in all permanent audiovisual facilities.

In support of education programs, the staff handled the projection of several film versions of Carmen in conjunction with the El Jaleo exhibition, including Cecil B. DeMille’s 1915 motion picture with live orchestral accompaniment. The department also maintained all automated slide and video programs, such as the ongoing Art Information and Introduction to Sculpture presentations and temporary exhibition adjuncts like the Journey of the Chandler and Pohrt Collection laser disc in Art of the American Indian Frontier.

The staff provided technical and projection support for the premiere of the Masters of Illusion film, produced in conjunction with the Circa 1492 exhibition. The new high definition television system in the small auditorium was used to full advantage with continuous presentations of this film, which had been converted to laser disc in Japan for this purpose. Demonstrations of the new technology were given to Gallery staff, colleagues from the Getty Museum and the Smithsonian, members of Congress, and others. Additional audiovisual support for Circa 1492 included assisting with the film’s showing at the Tribeca Screening Room in New York, recording the director’s Acousticuide tour of the exhibition, and technical support and recording of the press opening.

In addition to regular support given to the Gallery’s music office for the Sunday concerts, the staff coordinated the sound, lighting, and videotaping of a special jazz concert with George Shearing and the BBC Big Band. Department specialists lent technical assistance for two video conferences: a demonstration of the GTE ImageSpan system, and the Gallery’s official announcement of The Greek Miracle exhibition on VisNews. The staff also provided theater design and soundtrack production for The Greek Miracle slide program produced by the education division.

As part of a comprehensive plan for audiovisual improvements, and in accordance with the Americans with Disabilities Act, the department expanded the availability of assistive listening systems for the hearing impaired. In addition, a new high-speed audio dubbing system was implemented to provide better support for the Gallery Archives oral history program, the information office, and the lecture programs of the education division and the Center for Advanced Study in the Visual Arts. A foreign tape conversion system for the SECAM and PAL formats was introduced to allow in house viewing and dubbing of videotapes from around the world.
External Affairs

Development

While public funds provide for the upkeep and daily operations of the National Gallery, private philanthropic support builds the Gallery’s collections and enhances its programs. The objective of the development office is to encourage private sector participation. Key to this aim are the efforts of the Board of Trustees and Trustees’ Council to expand the Gallery’s constituency. The continued vitality of the Gallery depends upon the tradition of giving established by the Founding Benefactors.

After the extraordinary support received last year in honor of the 50th anniversary, the Gallery enjoyed a sustained level of giving this year that brought more than $11.5 million from individuals and foundations and from corporations for purposes other than exhibitions. We are extremely grateful for the support of all donors, whose names appear on pages 145–152 of this report.

Private citizens were tremendously generous, with gifts of art as well as funds. The Gallery accepted more than 1,700 gifts of painting, sculpture, and graphic art this year. Especially noteworthy were the gifts of two superb collections: the Woodner Family Collection of old master drawings; and the Dorothy and Herbert Vogel Collection of minimal and conceptual American art. These gifts, and other works of art given this year, are discussed in the pertinent curatorial sections of this report.

Donors also contributed funds for art acquisition. The Morris and Gwendolyn Cafritz Foundation committed a major grant in honor of the Gallery’s 50th anniversary for the National Sculpture Garden, and a portion of these funds was used to acquire the Gallery’s first sculpture by Joan Miró, Personnage Gothique, Oiseau-Eclair, for eventual installation in the garden. The Gallery’s collection of 20th-century works will also be enhanced through a generous gift for acquisition pledged by Perry and Nancy Lee Bass. Mrs. Howard Ross made a gift to help initiate the Gallery’s collection of contemporary works from the Saff Tech archive. The acquisition of the Rodin sculpture The Age of Bronze was made possible through the generous gift of Iris and B. Gerald Cantor.

The Gallery’s conservation efforts enjoyed substantial private support this year. The Samuel H. Kress Foundation made grants to support the restoration of the Kress Renaissance frames collection and the isotope analysis of the Kress French and Italian marble collection. A scientific research project supported in part by The Circle of the National Gallery of Art was a study to determine the optimum application of new infrared technology for examining paintings.

Significant grants were received for the Gallery’s exhibitions program and for research and scholarship activities. The Arnold D. Frese Foundation awarded a major grant for the organization of international exhibitions at the Gallery as well as for support of a scholar from Germany to visit as a senior research fellow at the Center for Advanced Study in the Visual Arts. Robert H. Smith renewed his generous support of the Robert H. Smith Fellowships, which promote the professional development of the Gallery’s curatorial staff by supporting brief sabbaticals awarded on a competitive basis for the purpose of research and special projects. Support for these fellowships, combined with an endowment created through a challenge grant from The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation to fund curatorial assistance and scholarly research relating to the permanent collection, helps sustain our efforts to bolster key areas of scholarly activity at the Gallery.

For its education initiatives the Gallery continued to receive substantial national support. Among the highlights were the Ahmanson Foundation’s challenge grant toward production of the interactive videodisc of the Circa 1492 exhibition, designed as an interdisciplinary learning tool for middle and high school age children; and The Elson Foundation’s gift to fund a public lecture series of conversations with artists, in which the public will hear from the artist who created the work given to the Gallery each year by the Collectors Committee. The Teacher Institute was supported by a grant from the William Randolph Hearst Foundation. This week-long summer enrichment program for teachers each year involves lectures on a particular art historical period, gallery tours, curriculum discussions, and visits to other museums.

Guided by Robert H. Smith and Katharine Graham, The Circle of the National Gallery of Art continued to grow in its sixth year. Members contributed more than $600,000, and their renewal rate was 78 percent. Circle members support a variety of programs of consistently high quality that benefit every visitor. Among the many projects funded by The Circle this year were production of the educational brochure accompanying the Gerard David Saint Anne Altarpiece exhibition and publication of a national directory of museum programs for teachers.

The development office played an active part in outreach and communication with several key constituencies, continuing to work closely with members of the Trustees’ Council and its development committee to build awareness and garner support for the Gallery. It organized the Forum on Connoisseurship and Collecting, a two-day session of curatorial lectures and related events designed to encourage younger collectors and philanthropists to become better acquainted with the Gallery. As a first step in developing a deferred giving program, the office produced various communications to acquaint Gallery donors and friends with opportunities for giving by bequest. In addition, with coordination by the development office, the National Gallery is communicating with major foundations and members of Congress to document the breadth of services provided by the Gallery to every regional area and congressional district in the country.

Corporate Relations

Corporations continue to support the Gallery in a number of ways, through sponsorship of exhibitions and exhibition-related projects such as films, videos and interactive videodiscs, education programs, brochures, catalogues, special events, advertising and press materials. The corporate relations office secures corporate funding for programs, serves as a liaison between the Gallery and corporate representatives, and ensures that sponsor relations with the Gallery are mutually beneficial.

Twenty-two corporations, two foundations, and one foreign government made contributions amounting to $5,689,000 in support of eight exhibitions and related programs in fiscal 1992. Another five corporations committed support for nine exhibitions and educational materials and programs planned for October 1992 through September 1993, totaling more than $4,267,000.

A global consortium of sponsors joined together to provide essential support for the monumental exhibition, Circa 1492: Art in the Age of Exploration. Led by Ameritech, which created a highly effective national advertising campaign for the exhibition, the consortium included Republic National Bank of New York, the Mitsui Taiyo Kobe Bank, Ltd., in partnership with Nomura Securities Co., Ltd., and European partners Banco Exterior de España (Grupo CBE) and Fiat S.p.A., which supported the exhibition’s preview and dinner attended by Their Majesties King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia of Spain. Additional support for the exhibition and catalogue was provided by the Rockefeller Foundation.

Canon U.S.A., Inc., and Canon, Inc., contributed generous support for the film Masters of Illusion, created in conjunction with the Circa 1492 exhibition. Sony Corporation provided in-kind assistance to the Gallery by transferring Masters of Illusion into high definition format and donating equipment for a high definition video theater in the East Building of the Gallery. At a special viewing and reception hosted by Ambassador and Mrs. Armacost at the American Embassy in Tokyo, 130 senior Japanese corporate executives attended a premiere of the high definition, Japanese-language version of the film. All Nippon Airways contributed in-kind transportation support, and Sony Corporation provided technical assistance. Following the success of the film’s premiere in Tokyo, Nippon Television Network Corporation purchased the Japanese broadcast rights for both the regular and high vision formats of the film.

In fiscal year 1992 Ameritech and Canon, U.S.A., Inc., continued their support of the Gallery through educational outreach programs related to Circa 1492. Canon U.S.A., Inc., underwrote an advance press screening of Masters of Illusion in New York to announce and promote the film’s national broadcast on PBS. Ameritech contributed additional funding for the development of an interactive Circa 1492 videodisc, designed for use in schools across the country, and including works of art from the exhibition.

The international tone set by the Circa 1492 consortium was continued with consortium sponsorship of the Käthe Kollwitz exhibition, presented in conjunction with the “Tribute to Germany” festival organized by the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. Beginning with the early support of Lufthansa German Airlines, which had provided transportation assistance for past exhibitions at the National Gallery, seven new companies came forward to sponsor *Kollwitz: Robert Bosch GmbH, Daimler-Benz, The Deutsche Bank Group, Mannesmann AG, Miles Inc., Siemens, and Thyssen AG. The government of the Federal Republic of Germany contributed additional support, and President Richard von Weizsäcker attended a special tour of the exhibition where he met with senior representatives of the corporate sponsors.

Other commitments in fiscal 1992 in support of the Gallery’s future international endeavors included generous grants to the Fund for the International Exchange of Art from Republic National Bank of New York and the Yomiuri Shim bun. Corporate contributions to this fund are used to support international exhibitions and films as well as other programs.

Nynex Foundation and New England Telephone cosponsored John Singer Sargent’s “El Jaleo,” making possible both the conservation of the beloved masterpiece from the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum in Boston and its presentation in a special exhibition in Washington. In response to high attendance and popularity, Nynex also provided further funding to print additional educational brochures. For its support of El Jaleo, the Business Committee for the Arts presented Nynex with the 1992 corporate leadership award.

Philip Morris Companies Inc. supported the Albert Bierstadt exhibition and a national print advertising campaign to promote the exhibition’s tour. And for its seventh sponsorship at the Gallery, Philip Morris committed support for the fiscal year 1993 exhibition The Greek Miracle as well as an international satellite teleconference to announce the exhibition, educational brochures, and a dynamic print advertising campaign to increase public awareness of the exhibition in Washington and New York. Additional support for the audiovisual presentation created in conjunction with the exhibition was generously provided by Stavros S. Niarchos.

American Express took a leadership role in support of the Gallery’s newest educational initiative, Micro Gallery Washington, by committing generous funding for the program’s design and development at the Gallery. Based on the highly successful interactive computer system at the National Gallery in London, Micro Gallery Washington would offer visitors both hands-on orientation to the Gallery’s permanent collection and detailed information about artists, works of art, and themes in the history of art.

CTE continued its longstanding patronage of the National Gallery’s exhibition programs by committing support for Great Paintings from The Barnes Foundation, its eighth exhibition at the Gallery since 1982. In addition, CTE agreed to support a long-lead press luncheon to announce the exhibition, which will open in Washington in May 1993, and its international exhibition tour.

In fiscal year 1992 the International Corporate Circle (ICC), chaired by John G. Whitehead, was delighted to welcome 14 new members. Representing all corners of the global business community, the new ICC members include AT&T France, Corning Incorporated, The Dai ichi Kangyo Bank, Ltd., Daiichi Pharmaceutical Co., Ltd., IBM Corporation, Japan Airlines Co., Ltd., Kajima Corporation, Lafarge Corporation, Milbank, Tweed, Hadley & McCloy, Obayashi Corporation, PepsiCo Foundation, Sony Corporation, the Yasuda Fire & Marine Insurance Co., Ltd., and Yasuda Fire & Marine Insurance Company of America (a complete list of ICC members can be found on page 147 of this report). Corporate benefits to ICC members included invitations to exhibition previews and the special screening of Masters of Illusion at the American Embassy in Tokyo. Members’ contributions during the ICC’s first year of activity supported the production of the Masters of Illusion film as well as its press screening in New York, and together with Ameritech, the Circa 1492 videodisc project.
Press and Public Information

The National Gallery enjoyed unprecedented national and international press coverage in fiscal year 1992. Circa 1492 was covered by more than 1,000 media sources, reaching a potential audience in excess of 100 million in more than 100 countries around the world. During opening week NBC-TV “Nightly News” with Tom Brokaw, CBS-TV “Sunday Morning,” and NBC-TV “Today” all broadcast major stories and interviews with J. Carter Brown and managing curator Jay Levenson. A video press release produced by the information office and sent by satellite was broadcast by dozens of local network affiliates and cable channels across the country over the Columbus Day weekend. AP and other newswire stories were published in approximately 400 newspapers. Articles appeared in such magazines as Circa 1492 also broke records for sheer diversity of coverage. The press breakfast and preview were attended by 200 print and radio reporters from some 30 countries, along with film crews from France, Italy, Austria, Germany, Japan, Spain, Russia, and Taiwan. Fifty television crews and photographers from the Americas and Spain recorded the tour of the exhibition by the King and Queen of Spain. A similar gathering of Hispanic and U.S. press covered the opening dinner. USIA and the Gallery information office collaborated on three satellite conferences, with Brown and Levenson meeting European and Latin American museum directors, art historians, and journalists. Interviews on Voice of America and feature stories on USIA television had potential audiences of 120 million in 120 countries. Poland’s historic loan of Leonardo da Vinci’s famous Lady with an Ermine (Cecilia Gallerani) drew favorable coverage on Polish television and in Newsweek, AP, and EFE (the worldwide Spanish newswire).

Two broadcasts of the film Masters of Illusion, produced by the National Gallery and Harper Films Incorporated in conjunction with Circa 1492, were seen on some 40 PBS stations in 50 of the country’s top markets this year. Syndicated television’s “Entertainment Tonight,” reaching 20 million viewers, and TV Guide, with more than 16 million readers, previewed and praised the show, as did New York magazine and numerous daily newspapers and PBS viewer magazines. Special screenings for entertainment and art press were organized in New York, Los Angeles, and London. A press screening in the Gallery’s new high definition video theater, donated and installed by Sony, created additional exposure to promote worldwide distribution of the film.

As part of the Gallery’s 50th anniversary activities, the press office also organized and hosted a four-day conference on “The Art of Art Criticism.” We invited 23 critics from around the country to join top editors such as former executive editor of the Washington Post Benjamin C. Bradlee, as well as publishers, critics, art experts, and museum directors in discussing topics that ranged from ethics to conservation and the traveling exhibition. Museum directors and critics from the Washington community participated in a panel on “Art Criticism in the Age of Globalism.” This conference met two significant goals: bringing together for in-depth discussion professionals whose influence is very wide but often underestimated; and giving critics from across the nation an opportunity to view Circa 1492, one of the most important exhibitions the Gallery has ever mounted. The response was enthusiastic in both respects.

As the Gallery’s 50th anniversary year came to a close, J. Carter Brown announced in his “Newsmaker’s Luncheon” speech to the National Press Club that the Gallery had just recorded 500,000 visits to Circa 1492 and Masters of Illusion and had received nearly 2,500 gifts in honor of its anniversary, notably the Dorothy and Herbert Vogel Collection of minimal and conceptual art and the Woodner Family Collection of old master drawings. The speech was carried by more than 400 National Public Radio stations and 4,200 cable systems affiliated with C-Span. The gifts of the Vogel and Woodner collections made headlines around the world. The New York Times, for example, devoted a substantial feature to the Woodner gift; and the Vogel gift was covered by a wide range of publications, from Parade, with some 32 million readers, to the International Herald Tribune.

Important national press coverage of the Gallery’s smaller focus exhibitions and permanent collection was achieved as well. Vanity Fair devoted a six-page spread and Antiques magazine ran a cover story on John Singer Sargent’s “El Jaleo.” And Walker Evans: Subway Photographs and Other Recent Acquisitions appeared first in a preview of fall attractions in Newsweek, then on CBS-TV’s “Sunday Morning,” and repeatedly on CNN.

A reception for the American Society of Newspaper Editors brought 800 journalists from around the country to the Gallery to view the reinstallment of the permanent collection in the West Building, J. Carter Brown extended a special invitation to John Russell, formerly senior art critic for the New York Times, who wrote an insightful article about this major undertaking.

The press office announced plans for the exhibition of The Greek Miracle: Classical Sculpture from the Dawn of Democracy, the Fifth Century B.C., via a satellite conference between the National Gallery and ERT-TV in Athens, Greece. Some 70 members of the press viewed taped messages from His Excellency Constantine Mitsotakis, Prime Minister of Greece, and from Chief Justice of the United States William H. Rehnquist, with live presentations from J. Carter Brown; Philippe de Montebello, director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art; Lynne Cheney, chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities; and Anna Psarouda-Benakis, Minister of Culture, Government of Greece. A live hook-up to the proceedings was fed to three network television stations in Greece, and a video news release sent out by satellite across the United States was broadcast by some 40 television stations in major markets such as New York, Los Angeles, and Philadelphia.

News of the joint project of the Gallery and the Georgia O’Keeffe Foundation to produce a catalogue raisonné of the works of O’Keeffe was reported coast-to-coast in major newspapers and art publications.

The press office this year began publication of a full-page, monthly advertisement for the Washington Post Weekend section, seen by some 800,000 people, to create greater awareness of the Gallery’s activities among the Washington metropolitan audience. The advertisement is reproduced as a handout for Gallery visitors. In addition, the office continued its production of a popular monthly calendar of events, distributed to approximately 32,000 households across the country, as well as a bimonthly staff newsletter.

The retirement of National Gallery director J. Carter Brown and the appointment of Earl A. Powell III as the Gallery’s new director generated major interest in art and museum circles, and the press office coordinated the announcements of these important events with particular care. Dozens of interviews with Brown and Powell were arranged with major news outlets following the announcements. Interviews and profiles were featured on National Public Radio and CBS-TV’s “Sunday Morning” as well as in the New York Times, the Washington Post, the Los Angeles Times, and other publications.

Special Events

The Gallery’s national and international role continues to make it a focus of important events and visits. The office of special events, which is responsible for the protocol and representational activities of the Gallery, this year organized an unparalleled schedule of events.

The fifth Andrew W. Mellon dinner was given by the trustees on October 10. The President of the United States and Mrs. Bush, Vice President and Mrs. Quayle, the Chief Justice, and many members of the Cabinet, Supreme Court, Congress, and Administration joined benefactors and donors to honor the founder of the National Gallery. Among the foreign guests who gathered to hear Paul Mellon’s tribute to his father and his sister, Ailsa Mellon Bruce, were the Queen of Norway, the President of Italy, the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps, and many ambassadors.

The same week saw the preview dinner for Circa 1492, which was honored by the presence of the King and Queen of Spain, President Spadolini of Italy, and other foreign dignitaries. During the preview week the Chancellor of Austria and the First Ladies of Costa Rica and Portugal also visited the exhibition. Later the exhibition was visited by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the wife of the Prime Minister of Greece, the wife of the President of Mexico, and members of the Mexican Cabinet. The President of Portugal and Mrs. Soares came to Washington for the closing reception for Circa 1492.

Many foreign dignitaries visited the permanent collection during the year, including Mrs. Bildt, wife of the Prime Minister of Sweden; the Prime Minister of Luxembourg; and Mrs. Boris Yeltsin.

The Collectors Committee, under the chairmanship of Ruth Carter Stevenson and Edwin L. Cox (members list on pages 147–148), came for a private viewing of Circa 1492 before going on to dinner at the Spanish Embassy residence. Following the committee’s annual meeting, members joined the trustees at their dinner in honor of the lenders to Albert Bierstadt.

Events honoring the Gallery’s award-winning films included both the preview of Masters of Illusion and a London screening of it and of Voices in Celebration, generously hosted by the United States Ambassador to the Court of St. James’, Raymond H.G. Seitz.

Among the year’s awards ceremonies, the trustees’ presentation following the preview of Dürer to Diebenkorn honoring additional donors to the Gallery’s 50th anniversary should be singled out.

Music played an important role in several unusual events, including a potlatch in honor of the Haida Gwaii and the Native American sculptor Bill Reid, when the sounds of drums and song filled the East Building; the reception in honor of El Jaleo, when Spanish guitarists played flamenco music; and the preview of Art of the American Indian Frontier, when Plains Indian music was sung.

In September a series of events bade farewell to J. Carter Brown and welcomed Earl A. Powell III. First of the festivities was an afternoon reception for the staff to greet the Gallery’s outgoing and incoming directors. Later the trustees’ reception in their honor gathered donors, friends, and colleagues from around the world.

Visitor Services

This department’s main function is to assist the millions of visitors who come to the National Gallery each year. Staff members provide individual assistance to those with special needs, make brochures easily accessible, respond to telephone requests for information concerning current events and exhibitions, receive and answer comment cards from the public, and supply crowd control for popular exhibitions, concerts, or lectures. This office supports other Gallery departments by reporting attendance figures for specific exhibitions as well as general attendance at the Gallery, by circulating a monthly summary of the public comment cards, and by coordinating special services for visiting VIPs.

Department staff assisted 568,192 visitors to the Circa 1492 exhibition and its accompanying film, Masters of Illusion. About 30 percent of the visitors used advance passes, available at no charge in the East Building lobby or for a small service charge through TicketMaster outlets or the TicketMaster 800 number. Daily passes were available to walk-in visitors.

Horticulture

In support of temporary exhibitions, the horticulture department provided special plantings for Circa 1492, transforming the pod I stairwells into a Peruvian landscape that reflected the Inca art in adjacent galleries, and the pod II stairwells into a Spanish garden typical of villas or coutyards in the time of Columbus. The designs featured oleanders, jasmine, and date palms. In other locations throughout the galleries tobacco plants represented the “new world” embraced by Columbus. The Bierstadt installation incorporated extensive plantings throughout the galleries to set off the massive landscape paintings on display, and the staff created a naturalistic landscape setting in the pod I stairwell using many of the plants depicted in the paintings. Plants were also used in the designs for the El Jaleo, Kathe Kollwitz, and Dürer to Diebenkorn exhibitions.

Outside, the department’s activities were directed primarily toward the six-acre property between 7th and 9th Streets transferred to the National Gallery from the National Park Service as the site for the future National Sculpture Garden. Horticulture staff assumed immediate responsibility for maintenance of the area, upgrading the existing landscape and implementing plans to preserve the 64 specimen linden trees on the site by removing the concrete walk that surrounded the trees and replacing it with mulch. The trees have also been placed on a regular watering and fertilizing schedule to ensure proper growth. Other minor changes in the landscape were undertaken to improve circulation patterns. Plans are underway to resod the site and install an irrigation system.

Other exterior landscape improvements included continuing work on the fountain gardens in front of the West Building and installing an automatic irrigation system on the lawns of the West Building along Constitution Avenue.

Music at the Gallery

Forty Sunday evening concerts were presented in the West Garden Court of the National Gallery in fiscal year 1992, which coincided with the 50th season of free concerts at the Gallery. Concerts were supported by funds bequeathed to the Gallery by William Nelson Cromwell and F. Lammot Belin, with additional subvention from the Morris and Gwendolyn Cafritz Foundation, the Ann and Gordon Getty Foundation, and the Embassy of Canada.

The National Gallery Orchestra performed ten concerts under the direction of George Manos, including two performances in the context of the 1991 Washington Mozart Festival. The orchestra and Manos marked the openings of three Gallery exhibitions with special concerts: 19th-century German and American music in honor of Albert Bierstadt; Spanish music and music inspired by Spanish traditions to celebrate Sargent’s “El Jaleo”; and works by Mahler and Hindemith in honor of Kathe Kollwitz.

The National Gallery Vocal Arts Ensemble, likewise under Manos’ artistic direction, observed the opening of the Circa 1492 exhibition with a concert of Renaissance music from Spain and the Americas, performed with the early music ensemble Hesperus. The Vocal Arts Ensemble traveled to Europe in August 1992 to perform in the First Scandinavian Music Festival, held in Kolding, Denmark, where the group was a favorite of audiences and critics alike. Their concert was recorded and rebroadcast throughout Scandinavia by the Danish National Radio Network.

The 49th American Music Festival, which ran from 4 April through 3 May, featured a jazz concert by the BBC Big Band with guest artist George Shearing, vocalist Angela Christian, and bassist Neil Swainson. This performance was recorded and later rebroadcast throughout England by the BBC. The festival also included the Washington premiere performances of works by Meyer Kupferman, William Wolfram, and Edward Applebaum and the world premiere of a new choral work by Samuel Gordon.

In addition to the continued live local broadcasts of National Gallery concerts on radio station WGMS, this year’s season was rebroadcast nationally on a regular basis on the National Public Radio program “Performance Today.” A color brochure to announce the concerts was printed again this year and was distributed both by mail and in the Gallery throughout the concert season. Gallery concerts were the subject of 13 reviews in various media and 12 newspaper photo previews. The National Gallery Vocal Arts Ensemble’s tour of Denmark received two highly favorable reviews in Danish newspapers.

At the founding of the Center in 1979 a four-part program of fellowships, meetings, publications, and research was instituted. The resident community of scholars at the Center in 1991-1992 included the Samuel H. Kress Professor, the Andrew W. Mellon Lecturer, eight senior fellows, ten visiting senior fellows, two Soros visiting senior research fellows, one postdoctoral fellow, and six predoctoral fellows. Nonresident scholars included ten predoctoral fellows and a curatorial fellow. Research by the scholars in residence involved diverse media, including architecture, painting, graphic arts, decorative arts, garden design, and petroglyphs, originating in cultures ranging from that of prehistoric peoples in North and South America to that of performance artists in the 1960s in New York City. Scholars focused on various issues such as ceremonialism, aesthetics, patronage, and the economics of still-life paintings.

The board of advisors, comprised of art historians from academic institutions and museums, meets annually to consider policies and programs of the Center. Members of the board serve overlapping appointments, usually for three-year terms. In December 1991 Donald Preziosi, University of California, Los Angeles, and John Rosenfield, Harvard University, completed their terms. In January 1992 Caroline Bruzelius, Duke University, and Lisa Golombek, Royal Ontario Museum, began their terms. In September 1992 Kathleen Weil-Garris Brandt, Institute of Fine Arts; Elizabeth Broun, National Museum of American Art; William MacDonald, Washington, D.C.; and Larry Silver, Northwestern University, began their terms. Six others continued to serve: Svetlana Alpers, University of California, Berkeley; Everett Fahy, Metropolitan Museum of Art; William Loerke, Dumbarton Oaks; Jules Prown, Yale University; David Rosand, Columbia University; and Kirk Varnedoe, Museum of Modern Art, New York. Members of the board also comprise the selection committees that review fellowship applications.

A variety of private sources support the programs of the Center. Senior, predoctoral, and curatorial fellowships are funded by endowments from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation and the Chester Dale bequest, and by Robert H. and Clarice Smith for the Smith predoctoral fellowship in Northern Renaissance painting. The Samuel H. Kress Foundation provides funds for the Kress Professor, Kress senior fellowships, a Kress postdoctoral fellowship, and Kress and Davis predoctoral fellowships. The Wyeth Endowment for American Art and Ittleson Foundation also support predoctoral fellowships. The Open Society Fund provides funds for visiting senior research fellowships for scholars from central Europe and the former Soviet Union. The Center has received support for scholarly meetings, programs, and events from various sources including the Arnold D. Frese Foundation, Inc., Hyatt Hotels Corpora-Four generations of students and teachers meet at the Center for Advanced Study in the Visual Arts: Richard Krautheimer taught John Coolidge, who taught the Dean of the Center, Henry Millon, who in turn taught Hillary Ballon.

The Center continued meetings with the Association of Research Institutes in Art History, a union of 12 institutions in North America that support advanced research through fellowships and related programs. Incorporated in spring 1987, ARIAH enables member institutions, as a group, to develop and seek funding for jointly sponsored programs and projects and to share visiting scholars. The Center also took part in meetings of the Washington Collegium for the Humanities, made up of 9 research institutions, and this year sponsored a lecture by Lynn Hollen Lees, University of Pennsylvania, in a Collegium series entitled, “Poverty in History, Literature, and the Arts.”

John Coolidge, educated at Harvard University (A.B. 1935), Columbia University, and the Institute of Fine Arts, New York University (M.A. 1939, Ph.D. 1948), became a lecturer at Vassar in 1936, then professor at the University of Pennsylvania, 1946–1947, and Harvard, 1947–1983, where he is now professor emeritus. He was director of the Fogg Art Museum at Harvard from 1948 to 1968. He has been a visiting professor at the University of Texas at Austin, Morgan Professor and later Bingham Professor at the University of Louisville, and Kennedy Professor at Smith College. He was a founder, first vice-president, and several times director of the Society of Architectural Historians. He has been vice-president and several times director of the College Art Association, and book review editor of the Art Bulletin. He has served as trustee, 1949–1975, vice-president, 1973–1975, president, and now president emeritus, of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, and has published numerous scholarly articles on Vignola, Rubens, Italian Renaissance and baroque architecture, and American art museums.

While at the Center, Professor Coolidge concentrated on two projects, a preface for the reedited version of his Mill and Mansion: A Study of Architecture and Society in Lowell, Massachusetts, 1820–1865, and research on monumental secular interiors erected since 1850.

PUBLICATIONS
The Center annually compiles a record of the scholarly events and research of the preceding year. Center 12, published in October 1992, contains general information about the fellowship program, the program of meetings, and the publication and research programs, as well as the board of advisors and the members of the Center, and the list of activities for 1991–1992. Center 12 also contains summary reports on research conducted by the resident members of the Center in 1991–1992 and by several fellows from the previous academic year.

Papers presented at symposia sponsored by the Center are often gathered and published in the National Gallery’s series of Studies in the History of Art. To date, 18 symposium volumes have appeared, with the most recent—Nationalism in the Visual Arts (vol. 29), New Perspectives in Early Greek Art (vol. 32), and The Pastoral Landscape (vol. 36)—published in fiscal year 1992; a complete list of titles in the series is printed in the front of each volume. Papers from numerous other symposia are in various stages of preparation. Another regular publication of the Center is the directory of art history research projects supported by granting institutions in the United States and abroad: Sponsored Research in the History of Art 11 lists awards for 1991–1992.
Financial Report

Funds needed to operate the National Gallery of Art in fiscal year 1992 amounted to $67.4 million, of which $54.9 million in funds appropriated to the Gallery by Congress were utilized. The remaining $12.5 million represented private funds, primarily in the form of income from endowment and grants from corporations and foundations to support special exhibitions and other Gallery programs. The sources of funding 1992 operations are summarized below:

The accompanying pie chart shows the various categories of 1992 operating expenses.

FEDERAL FUNDS

The use of federal funds to operate the Gallery stems from a 1937 Joint Resolution of Congress, which accepted an unprecedented gift that Andrew W. Mellon made to the people of the United States. The gift consisted of his art collection, funds to construct a building (now the West Building), and an endowment fund. The Congress pledged the faith of the U.S. to provide funds for the upkeep, administration, and operations (including the protection and care of works of art acquired by the Board of Trustees) so that the Gallery would be properly maintained and works of art exhibited regularly to the public free of charge.

Since the Gallery opened to the public, federal funds have supported major operations of the Gallery, including curatorial and education departments, security, maintenance, and day-to-day functions. At the same time, all purchases of works of art have been made with private funds. Construction of the East Building was privately financed.

The Gallery received a 13 percent increase in its federal appropriation for 1992. This increase, while less than in previous years, was needed to offset salary and other federally mandated increases. Included was authorization for ten additional positions to fill important vacancies, among them a curator of American art, an attorney, and four positions in procurement and supply operations. Funds were also provided to augment existing educational programs, art restoration services and supplies, security, facilities maintenance, and automated data processing. Substantive funding was provided for repairs, restoration, and renovation of both the East and the West Buildings.

PRIVATE FUNDS

Unrestricted Funds

Unrestricted funds supporting operations consist primarily of income from the Andrew W. Mellon Endowment Fund originally established in the early years of the Gallery. These funds were augmented by income from food services and proceeds of recorded tours related to the Circa 1492 exhibition. The income from unrestricted funds is used for the compensation of executive personnel, payment of professional fees, insurance, fundraising, and other operating costs not covered by federal funds.

Restricted Funds

Special Exhibitions: During fiscal year 1992 the Gallery mounted 12 major and several smaller exhibitions, at a total cost of $11.7 million. The largest of these, Circa 1492, was supported by major grants from Ameritech; Nomura Securities Co., Ltd./Mitsui Taiyo Kobe Bank, Ltd.; Republic National Bank of New York; and an anonymous donor; with additional support from Banco Exterior de Espana (Grupo CBE); Fiat, S.p.A.; and the Rockefeller Foundation. In addition, $2.5 million of federal funds were specifically appropriated for Circa 1492. The Circle of the National Gallery of Art funded production of several versions of the exhibition brochure; and Canon U.S.A., Inc., and Canon, Inc., underwrote Masters of Illusion, the film that accompanied the exhibition.

Basic support for the Gallery’s exhibition program was provided by appropriated federal funds amounting to $3.5 million. The federal government is also a major factor in the international component of the Gallery’s exhibitions through its indemnity program, managed by the Federal Council on the Arts and the Humanities. Under this program, the National Gallery and other museums throughout the country have been relieved of much of the burden of insuring art treasures coming to the U.S. from abroad. During the past year four of the Gallery’s exhibitions, including Circa 1492, received indemnity coverage for works of art coming from all over the world. Without the benefit of government indemnity, many, if not most, international exhibitions would not be possible because of prohibitively expensive insurance costs. The Gallery has participated in the federal indemnity program since it became available in the 1970s without any loss or damage to art.

CASVA: The Center for Advanced Study in the Visual Arts derived 80 percent of its income from two Andrew W. Mellon Foundation endowments and grants from the Samuel H. Kress Foundation, individuals, and other supporting foundations. Expenses are included in the operating statement under the headings “Educations-Conservation: Conservation costs of $2.4 million were primarily (82 percent) funded by federal appropriations. Private funds of $431,903 supported eight fellowships, staff research, and seminars. The Gallery has separate laboratories and facilities for conservation of paintings, objects, paper, textiles, and scientific research.

Research Services and Music: Supplementing federal funds, $445,704 in designated private funds were used to purchase books and photographs for the Gallery’s library and photographic archives. The largest single privately funded purchase was the Lanfranchi Emblem Book Collection. The Gallery’s music department, which arranges and presents the regular Sunday evening concerts, was largely funded by private resources at a level of $379,732 in 1992.

Investments

The investment portfolio of the Gallery grew to a market value of approximately $228 million on 30 September 1992, 4.6 percent higher than the preceding fiscal year. Common and preferred stocks comprised 47 percent of the entire portfolio compared with 37 percent at the end of fiscal year 1991. The portfolio is made up of endowment funds and, to a lesser extent, funds for special purposes designated by the donors. The largest single portion of endowment funds is the Patrons’ Permanent Fund, dedicated to the purchase of works of art. Its market value amounted to $76 million at year end. The portfolio is supervised by the finance committee of the Board of Trustees and managed by an investment advisory team made up of Scudder, Stevens & Clark, and First Manhattan Capital Management, both of New York, and Sound Shore Management, Inc., of Greenwich, Connecticut. The custodian is the Riggs National Bank of Washington, D.C.

The early endowment fund established by Andrew W. Mellon has been supplemented over the years by endowments given by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation and Mr. Paul Mellon to operate the Center for Advanced Study in the Visual Arts and provide for art conservation and building funds. In 1992 the Gallery’s art purchase funds were strengthened by the third of five gifts of $1 million from the Annenberg Foundation, which in turn was used to help acquire Japanese Footbridge by Claude Monet, in conjunction with the bequest of Mrs. Victoria Coberly. Many other generous individuals also made contributions for the purchase of works of art, for fellowships, and for scholarly endeavors.

ART ACQUISITIONS

During the year purchases of works of art amounted to $21,954,782 compared with $10,719,929 in the prior year. Purchases of particular significance included the Woodner Family Collection of master drawings, Monet’s Japanese Footbridge, and a Miró sculpture, Personnage Gothique, Oiseau-Eclair. Funds specifically designated for the purchase of works coupled with unrestricted quasi-endowment funds were used to complete this year’s purchases.

PUBLICATIONS FUND

With the surge of visitors to see Circa 1492, attendance at the Gallery was higher than in recent years, and publication sales of $9.5 million were slightly above 1991 sales; profits were dampened, however, by extraordinary charges attributable to the Circa 1492 catalogue. The net proceeds of publication sales, along with income earned on existing fund balances, were used to finance, through a revolving fund, the production of catalogues, research publications, and other scholarly publications directly related to the Gallery. During the year the Board of Trustees mandated the allocation of $5.5 million of the principal of publication funds as a reserve to ensure the publication of the Gallery’s 30-volume systematic catalogue.

THE CIRCLE OF THE NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART

The Gallery is grateful to have the continued support of 380 members of The Circle, led by Robert H. Smith and Katharine Graham. From 1987 to 1992 individual contributions of Circle members have been used to underwrite a wide array of important Gallery projects. Virtually every Gallery program has benefited.

TREASURER’S OFFICE AND COMPUTER OPERATIONS

The treasurer and his staff are responsible for general financial management and policy, overseeing investment management, budgeting, accounting, payroll, and insurance. The office manages the systems and the controls for the security and disposition of the funds described in the accompanying financial statements. It also has oversight of the Gallery’s computer operations, both fiscal and curatorial.

During the past year the assistant treasurer for management information and his staff installed a new computerized collection management system. Using state-of-the-art technology, the system makes readily available a wealth of information about each work of art owned or handled by the National Gallery for the use of curators, exhibition staff, and other personnel.

In addition, benefiting from equipment and expertise provided by the IBM Corporation, the Gallery has devised a system to produce computerized digital images of the collection with the utmost clarity and accuracy of color. These images will be tied into the collection management system. Since digital images do not fade or scratch and can be transmitted by wire, we have great hopes that the new technology will constitute a major improvement in art communications and education.

CONCLUSION

It is a time of transition. At the end of the fiscal year a small office on Pennsylvania Avenue was leased (with private funds) to provide director emeritus J. Carter Brown with a base for his role as roving goodwill ambassador for the Gallery. The new director, Earl A. Powell III, is settling in, with the prospect of a new Administration and new faces in Congress. Now, as much as ever, we feel the importance to the Gallery of friends and supporters throughout the country and in Washington. Their recognition of the value of this unique combination of public and private funding for the nation’s art museum keeps us optimistic about the future.

Notes to Financial Statements

Note 1. Summary of significant accounting policies

FUND ACCOUNTING—To ensure observance of limitations and restrictions placed on the use of resources available to the National Gallery of Art (the Gallery), the accounts of the Gallery are classified for accounting and reporting purposes into separate funds established according to their nature and purposes. Separate accounts are maintained for each fund; however, in the accompanying financial statements, funds that have similar characteristics have been combined into fund groups:

Operating funds, which include unrestricted and restricted resources, are those expendable funds that support the Gallery’s operations.

Funds for special purposes include the publications fund, which is used to finance, in a revolving fund manner, the production of catalogues, and other scholarly activities directly related to the programs and collections of the Gallery. Publications revenue and expenses are recorded as additions and deductions, respectively, in the statement of changes in fund balances. Other funds for special purposes are primarily restricted to art acquisitions, capital construction, and fellowships. Endowment funds require in perpetuity that principal be invested and that only the income be used. Permanent endowment funds are subject to restriction by donor, grantor, or other outside party. Funds functioning as endowment are subject to restriction by the Gallery’s Board of Trustees.

Federal funds represent appropriations from the Congress of the United States for the operations of the Gallery. The Gallery receives “one-year” appropriations, which, when not obligated or expended, are retained by the Gallery for a period of five years prior to being returned to the U.S. Treasury; and “no-year” appropriations, for the repair, renovation, and restoration of its buildings and for special exhibitions. No-year appropriations are retained until expended.

UNDELIVERED ORDERS—In accordance with accounting principles prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States as set forth in the Policy and Procedures Manual for Guidance of Federal Agencies, the obligation basis of accounting used for federal funds differs in some respects from generally accepted accounting principles. Obligations, such as purchase orders and contracts, are recognized as expenses and are carried as liabilities even though the related goods or services may not have been received. Such amounts are included in undelivered orders and are available until expended. Nonfederal funds do not account for undelivered orders.

ART COLLECTION—In conformity with accounting policies generally followed by art museums, the value of art has been excluded from the balance sheet. The Gallery acquires its art collections through purchase or by donation-in-kind. Only current year purchases, but not donations-in-kind, are reflected in the statement of changes in fund balances.

INVESTMENTS—Investments are carried at current market value based upon the last reported sales price at the end of the fiscal year or, in the absence of a reported sale, upon the average of the bid and asked prices. Purchases and sales of securities are reflected on a trade-date basis. Gain or loss on sales of securities is based on average historical value (cost of securities if purchased or the fair market value at the date of receipt if received by donation). Dividends and interest are recorded on the accrual basis. In accordance with the policy of stating investments at fair value, the net change in unrealized appreciation or depreciation for the year is reflected in the statement of changes in fund balances (see Note 4).

PUBLICATIONS INVENTORY—Publications inventory is carried at the lower of cost or market. Cost is determined using the retail cost method.

DEFERRED CHARGES—Deferred charges represent expenses incurred in connection with future special exhibitions and other activities and are recognized in the period in which they occur.

FIXED ASSETS—The land occupied by the Gallery’s buildings was appropriated and reserved by the Congress of the United States for that purpose. No value has been assigned in the accompanying financial statements. Buildings are recorded at cost and depreciated on a straight-line basis over the estimated useful life of 50 years. Equipment, furniture, and computer software are also recorded at cost and depreciated on a straight-line basis over estimated useful lives ranging from 5 to 25 years. Upon retirement of fixed assets, the related cost and accumulated depreciation are removed from the accounts (see Note 6).

REVENUE RECOGNITION—Grants, gifts, and bequests are recognized as support and revenue or additions to funds for operations, special purposes, or endowment funds on the accrual basis. Support and revenue received for future periods is deferred.

Contributions received by the Gallery in support of special exhibitions occurring at one or more participating museums are recorded as revenue to the Gallery to the extent that shared costs are incurred by the Gallery.

Pledges for the purchase of works of art are recorded when collected.

U.S. GOVERNMENT FUNDS PROVIDED FOR PRIOR YEARS—The National Defense Authorization Act of 1991 changed the accounting for unobligated balances of past and current years for all federal agencies. Federal agencies are now required to maintain each annual appropriation in their records for five years. At the end of the fifth year, the appropriation account is closed and any unobligated balance is returned to the U.S. Treasury.

OPERATING INCOME FROM ENDOWMENT FUND—Income derived from investments of endowment funds is accounted for as revenue of the appropriate operating fund or, if applicable, as additions to funds for special purposes. It is the policy of the Board of Trustees to limit the amount of dividends and interest available for expenditure in operations in any year and to return unused income to the principal of the appropriate endowment funds. In keeping with this policy, the amount of interest and dividends available for expenditures is equal to 5.5% of the four-year average market value of the invested funds. Total income generated by endowments for operations was $4,984,691 and $5,129,941 for the years ended 30 September 1992 and 1991. Of these amounts, $4,188,833 and $3,871,500 was used for operating purposes and, pursuant to the trustees’ policy noted above, $795,858 and $1,258,441 was returned to principal for these respective years.

ANNUAL LEAVE—The Gallery’s employees earn annual leave in accordance with federal law and regulations. The cost of leave is recorded as salary expense only as leave is taken.
CONTRIBUTED SERVICES—A substantial number of unpaid volunteers have made significant contributions of their time in the furtherance of the Gallery’s programs. This contributed time is not reflected in these statements, since no objective basis is available for determining the value of these services.

Note 2. Cash
The Gallery invests its excess nonfederal cash in money market funds, which are converted into cash as needed to meet the Gallery’s obligations. Federal cash of $13,088,988 is on deposit with the U.S. Treasury and represents appropriated amounts not yet disbursed.

This loan bears interest at 7½% below the average monthly rate for long-term funds paid by the U.S. Treasury (ranging from 6.625% to 7.375% during fiscal year 1992). Interest income on this loan was $364,948 and $403,438 for the years ended 30 September 1992 and 1991, respectively.

Note 8. Retirement benefits
All permanent employees of the Gallery, both federal and nonfederal, hired prior to 1 January 1984, participate in the Civil Service Retirement System (CSRS), and those hired subsequent to 1 January 1984 participate in both the Social Security Retirement System and the new Federal Employees’ Retirement System (FERS), which went into effect 1 January 1987. Under FERS, employees have the option to make tax-deferred contributions to a Thrift Savings Plan and in some instances receive a matching portion from the Gallery.

The Gallery funds all retirement contributions on a current basis and accordingly there are no unfunded retirement costs. Total pension expense of the Gallery was approximately $3,385,000 and $2,956,000 for the years ended 30 September 1992 and 1991, respectively.

Note 9. Income taxes
The Gallery is a nonprofit organization exempt from federal income taxes under the provisions of §501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code and the applicable income tax regulations of the District of Columbia.

Note 10. Commitments and contingencies
The Gallery has entered into two operating leases for warehouse space. Under these leases, the Gallery has the right to cancel upon 12 months’ written notice to the lessor prior to the end of the initial lease term. Future minimum rental commitments under these leases at 30 September 1992 are approximately as follows:

Gifts and Bequests

The buildings, collections, and many of the programs of the National Gallery are largely the result of private generosity, as the Gallery must rely on private support to fund art acquisition and many special projects. The Board of Trustees has full authority to receive funds and property, both real and personal, for the general purposes of the National Gallery of Art.

Gifts may be made by check payable to the Trustees of the National Gallery of Art.

Donations of works of art to the Gallery’s collection are subject to approval by the Board of Trustees. Offers of such gifts should be discussed in advance with the Secretary and General Counsel (telephone 202 842–6363). Offers of gifts of books of art historical importance should be discussed in advance with the Executive Librarian (telephone 202 842–6505).

Deferred gifts, by which a donor makes a commitment to benefit the Gallery at a later date, can enable many donors to make substantially larger contributions than by an outright gift and can maximize tax benefits and cost-effectiveness of making a gift. You may indicate that the National Gallery of Art is to receive a certain sum of money, property, works of art, or a percentage of your estate. If you are considering a bequest or other form of deferred gift, we encourage you to discuss confidentially how you would like your intended gift to be used by contacting the Development Officer (telephone 202 842–6372).

All gifts and bequests are deductible, within the limits prescribed by law, for applicable federal tax purposes.
