NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART
OPENS REDESIGNED CASCADE CAFE,
OFFERING AN ENHANCED DINING EXPERIENCE FOR VISITORS

Washington, DC—The National Gallery of Art's remodeled Cascade Café, located within view of the Cascade waterfall on the concourse level, is now open. The largest of several Gallery restaurants, it features seven food stations, including an espresso and gelato bar, as well as an additional 150 seats to accommodate five hundred visitors. The Cascade Café is managed by Culinare International, which also manages the Gallery's Garden Café and Coffee Bar.

Guests can watch food being freshly prepared and cooked in "open kitchens" and can make selections from the Bakery, Sandwich Bar, Chef’s Table, Pizza Oven, Soup and Salad Bar, and The Grille. Confections are freshly baked at the Bakery counter every day and pizzas are prepared in a wood-burning oven. The Espresso and Gelato Bar offers a colorful array of homemade gelati and sorbetti in eighteen flavors (the only full gelato production facility in the D.C. area), as well as specialty salads, paninis, fresh-baked desserts, and biscotti.

Hours for the Cascade Café are Monday–Saturday, 10:00–3:00, and Sunday, 11:00–4:00. The Espresso and Gelato Bar are Monday–Saturday, 10:00–4:30, and Sunday, 11:00–5:30.

Design

The new Cascade Café design is intended to successfully bridge the space between the Gallery's contemporary East Building and neoclassical West Building. The design fuses elements of I.M. Pei's original design with updated classic American diner features. Pei's use of stone serving surfaces, for example, has been updated with the use of American granite. His original stainless steel tray slides have been retained along with the original ceilings. Quilted stainless steel panels front the food service counters and the kitchen entrance.

Brushed and polished stainless steel is used throughout as banding and continues in the banding of the terrazzo floor. Marble chips and blue glass embedded in the terrazzo complement the Gallery's signature cobalt blue, which is used as an accent color and in the tiles of the wood-burning pizza oven. The Café's wheat-colored walls and columns feature reproductions of works of art from the Gallery's works of art that have food as their subject.

To accommodate a larger number of diners, and to avoid long lines the new café layout features distinct food service areas and beverage islands. There are thirty two heads of soda at four beverage islands and six cash registers in operation. Self-busing is made easier for diners by the installation of a state-of-the-art conveyor belt wide enough to carry fully laden trays. Wheelchair accessibility was carefully integrated into the design.

The Cascade Café redesign project team includes members of the staffs of the National Gallery of Art, Darrell Willson, Culinare International, and Carrell Poole and Yost Architecture of Dallas.
