Film Series

Master Class: Pina and Tanaquil
Two of the greatest dancers of our age—Pina Bausch (1940–2009) and Tanaquil Le Clercq (1929–2000)—are the focus of this two-part program presented in collaboration with the National Archives and on occasion of the National Gallery of Art exhibition Degas/Cassatt. Screenings take place at the McGowan Theater of the National Archives, 7th Street and Constitution Avenue NW, Washington, DC.

Pina
Thursday, August 14, 7:00 p.m.
McGowan Theater, National Archives
German director Wim Wenders was in the midst of filming the groundbreaking modernist choreographer Pina Bausch when she died suddenly in 2009. A visionary whose cogent and compelling work with the Tanztheater Wuppertal transformed the history of dance, Bausch believed in blending the formal vocabularies of theater, dance, sound, and design. Although Wenders stopped all work on the film when his subject died, he was able to complete the project two years later. Pina made its debut at the 2011 Berlinale. (Wim Wenders, 2011, 100 minutes)

Afternoon of a Faun: Tanaquil Le Clercq
Thursday, August 28, 7:00 p.m.
McGowan Theater, National Archives
Introduced by Nancy Buiski
The story of prima ballerina Tanaquil Le Clercq is an epic tale of genius, grace, uncertainty, and ultimate tragedy. Arguably the greatest American dancer of the 20th century (and a muse to both Jerome Robbins and George Balanchine), she became a victim of polio in her late 20s. Her life history and the incredible circumstances that led to her shattering fall are recounted in the film through a wealth of archival footage and sources. (Nancy Buirski, 2014, 91 minutes)

Lectures

National Gallery of Art

The Radicalism of the "Little Dancer Aged Fourteen"
Sunday, November 16, noon
Jill DeVonyar, independent curator and former ballet dancer, and Richard Kendall, curator at large, Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute, Williamstown

Inside Look: Little Dancer Aged Fourteen
Sunday, November 23, 2:00 p.m.
Alison Luchs, curator of early European sculpture, Daphne Barbour, senior conservator, and Shelley Sturman, head of object conservation, will take visitors inside the extraordinary life of this sculpture, through the story of its creation and its reception in the art world. While Edgar Degas experimented with sculpture throughout his career, Little Dancer Aged Fourteen is the only three-dimensional work he ever exhibited. The statuette created a sensation when it went on view in the sixth impressionist exhibition in 1881, both for its subject and for its hypernaturalistic materials.

Degas & His Dancers
Saturday, November 8, noon
Kennedy Center Grand Foyer
Edgar Degas created more than 1,200 works and more than half of these depict dancers. This 45-minute lecture, presented by Kimberly A. Jones, associate curator, department of French paintings at the National Gallery of Art, will delve into Degas's rich body of work on this subject and his lifelong fascination with the art form that inspired him.

The Most Famous Obsolete Dancer in the World: Marie van Goethem
Saturday, November 15, noon
Kennedy Center Grand Foyer
Art historian Richard Kendall introduces us to Degas's famous sculpture and dance historian Jill De Vonyar explores what we know about the real "Little Dancer," a story of mystery and obscurity.

The Life of a 19th Century Dancer: Paris Opera Ballet and Les Petits Rats
Saturday, November 22, noon
Kennedy Center Grand Foyer
The lives of the dancers in the Paris Opera Ballet are very different today than they were 120 years ago when Marie van Goethem, Degas's sitter for Little Dancer Aged Fourteen, danced there. From the way they danced to the role of the ballet "benefactors," the story of the musical Little Dancer reveals the seamy side of an art form that has come to be associated with elegance, grace, and genteel femininity. Join dance critic, author, and ballet historian Alexandra Tomaloni for a look at the progression of ballet from then to now.
