Washington, DC—The fall film season opens with the series Film, Video, and Virginia Dwan, organized to complement the exhibition Los Angeles to New York: Dwan Gallery, 1959–1971. The four-part series Ipersignificato: Umberto Eco and Film honors the legacy of the late Italian philosopher and aesthetics specialist Umberto Eco. Dunhuang Projected, shown in association with the Freer Gallery of Art while the Freer theater is closed for renovation, is an eclectic mix of cinematic works illustrating the rich legacy of areas once comprising the Silk Road.

Other programs this fall include the film series Barbara Kruger Selects, relating the cinematic inclinations of this conceptual artist who analyzed the messages disseminated through mass media. The Gallery will screen two early works by Luis Buñuel as part of the citywide project Objects of Desire: The Films of Luis Buñuel. The annual Rajiv Vaidya Memorial Lecture features a discussion by historian Tom Gunning titled The Innovations of the Moving Image. Selections from the popular International Festival of Films on Art, several ciné-concerts, and Steven Spielberg’s first feature-length film, Duel, add to the fall film schedule at the National Gallery of Art.

Dunhuang Projected
November 12–27
Dunhuang is the Gobi desert oasis town in northwestern China that was, for one thousand years (400–1400 CE), an important nexus of the Silk Road and the gateway for Buddhism from India into China. The town’s mile-long complex of caves holds the largest extant collection of Buddhist mural art and sculptures in the world and is recognized as a UNESCO World Heritage site. The migration of ideas and cultures through trade and conquest finds exemplary expression in The Cave of the Silken Web, Stage Sisters, and A Better Tomorrow, while Saving Mes Aynak chronicles the urgent struggle to rescue an imperiled Greco-Buddhist past in a Western counterpart of Dunhuang on the Silk Road. Today, that site lies in Taliban-threatened territory in Afghanistan. “Each film is a hallmark of its own filmmaking era, yet collectively they emanate the cultural syncretisms of the Chinese treaty ports of Shanghai and Hong Kong in the twentieth century”—Cheng-Sim Lim, chief curator, China Onscreen Biennial. Dunhuang Projected is a multiyear, interdisciplinary media arts project of the UCLA Confucius Institute presented in this, its pilot year, as an affiliated program of the China Onscreen Biennial. Presented in association with the Freer Gallery of Art. With special thanks to San Francisco Silent Film Festival, Tom Vick, and Cheng-Sim Lim.

Ipersignificato: Umberto Eco and Film
November 13–December 28
A literary and cultural giant whose influence reached all facets of our rapidly evolving media, Umberto Eco (1932–2016), through decades of interdisciplinary writing, moved seamlessly from semiotics to aesthetics, popular culture, philosophy, fiction writing, and informal cultural commentary. Cinema informed his own theoretical approach to his work in semiotics and in turn, the field of cinema studies has been enriched by his versatile contributions. He was a founding father (along with Pier Paolo Pasolini, Christian Metz, and Roland Barthes) of the concept of film language. This program of two divergent film pairings evokes Eco’s philosophy of the cinema. For supplementary notes on Umberto Eco and film, with references to this program, see nga.gov/film. With special thanks to Umberto Varicchio.

Barbara Kruger Selects
December 3–31
Barbara Kruger is a conceptual artist who, beginning in the early 1980s, empowered the female subject through a resistance to the gaze. Her art developed at a time when the critical discourse questioning power structures dominated visual practice. An investigation into the way in which viewer identity is constructed and how meaning is embedded and disseminated through mass media led artists such as Kruger to challenge the dynamics of what it means to look and be looked at. This extended naturally to film and television. Indeed, she wrote as a critic on these topics for Artforum.
Kruger’s concerns have taken on increasingly broader meaning, to explore the nature of human relationships. In conjunction with the exhibition In the Tower: Barbara Kruger, the artist has selected four favorite films for this series.

Commedia dell’Arte—Reprise
December 10–11
Two Italian filmmakers contrive contemporary, but very different, roles for two of the popular masked figures of Commedia dell’Arte: Io, Arlecchino, while reviving the traditional character of Harlequin, underscores the Commedia’s reliance on ensemble playing and comic technique, and its fondness for predictable scenarios. Bella e perduta, on the other hand, reworks the ancient symbol of Pulcinella to form a metaphysical statement about loss and decay. With special thanks to the New Italian Cinema Event, Florence, and the Italian Cultural Institute, Washington.
