Tobias Picker has more than thirty works to his credit, including a symphony, a piano concerto, and a violin concerto. A native of New York City, Mr. Picker studied composition with Charles Wuorinen and Elliott Carter. Old and Lost Rivers came about as a result of a commission from the Houston Symphony, and was inspired by the stillness of the dry tributaries of Houston’s Trinity River.

Chopin’s Third Piano Sonata is one of his most intimate and profound works, written near the end of his life, and full of the nostalgia and melancholy that were his prevalent moods at that time. Nevertheless, the sonata, like every great piece of music, is the artist’s sublime triumph over all tribulation and distraction. The Largo movement is famous in all the repertoire for its aching beauty.

Pianist Tzimon Barto has enjoyed spectacular success in recent years. Last season alone, he appeared as soloist with the National Symphony, the Berlin Philharmonic, and the National Orchestras of Japan, France, and the Czech Republic, and at all five venues he received resounding standing ovations. In the previous season, Mr. Barto played his Salzburg Festival debut, as well as recitals in Munich, Berlin, and Houston. He has just completed a tour of South America with the Bamburg Symphony, under the baton of Christoph Eschenbach, and he has two concert tours of Germany in store for later in this season. Tzimon Barto records exclusively for EMI and appears at the National Gallery by arrangement with Columbia Artists Management, Inc., of New York City.

The identification numbers that are attached to Haydn’s works go well into the hundreds, and are a reminder of just how prolific a composer he was. In the case of his piano sonatas, each successive generation of musicologists has come up with another way of numbering them, based upon new information that has surfaced. Musicologist Christa Landon, wife of the great Haydn scholar H. C. Robbins Landon, identified the E Minor Sonata in the 1960s as Haydn’s fifty-third sonata out of a total of sixty. Some years later, a German scholar, Georg Feder, published a catalog in which the same sonata was number twenty-two, and the most exhaustive catalog compiled to date, that of Dutch musicologist Anthony van Hoboken, identifies it as number thirty-four and finds a total of only fifty-one sonatas attributable to Haydn. The debate about numbering Haydn’s works will probably continue for many years to come, but it is known for sure that Haydn wrote the E Minor Piano Sonata in 1784 at the age of fifty-two, when he still had twenty-five more years to live and more piano sonatas to write, not to mention such monumental works as The “London” and “Paris” Symphonies, The Creation, the Seasons, and six of his great masses for chorus, soloists, and orchestra.

Even though his French spelling and grammar left something to be desired, Franz Schubert certainly had the perfect title for the short character pieces which he called Musical Moments. The pieces are extremely succinct, each one effectively expressing a single musical thought.

Franz Liszt composed his Paganini Etudes in order to be able to play on the piano some of the melodies of the virtuoso violinist and composer Nicolo Paganini, who was the darling of Europe in the days when Liszt was a young man. Liszt was impressed with Paganini’s unprecedented technical skill on the violin, and no doubt carefully studied the Italian’s brilliant career as a model for the one he eventually fashioned for himself.
