It was when Grieg was twenty-one years old that he had a change of attitude toward the folk music of his native Norway, to which he had previously paid little attention. This embrace of the traditional was encouraged by the composer Rikard Nordraak, whom Grieg met in Copenhagen in 1864, and inspired infusion of strong melodic folk elements into Grieg’s richly chromatic yet clearly harmonic style. When describing their first meeting, Grieg said “It was as if a mist fell from my eyes and I knew what I wanted.” All of his later works, including the C Minor Violin Sonata, contain echoes of Norwegian melodic turns or rhythms, but still preserve Grieg’s strongly individualistic approach to composition. The Violin Sonata shows a great degree of thematic concentration, but nevertheless, Grieg always insisted that he wrote music from the heart.

PAUL TARDIF is also a graduate of the Eastman School of Music, where he won first prize in the International Piano Guild Competition. He went on to earn his Doctor of Musical Arts Degree at the Peabody Conservatory under renowned pianist Leon Fleischer. He also received a Fulbright Grant, and consequently studied in Munich and Salzburg. A finalist in the Alfredo Casella International Piano Competition, Mr. Tardif has appeared at the Carnegie Recital Hall, the Kennedy Center, and twice before at the National Gallery, as both accompanist and soloist. He has also performed as soloist with the North Carolina Symphony, the Kennedy Center Orchestra, the Kansas City Philharmonic, and the Boston Pops Orchestra, and has toured Costa Rica and Jordan. Mr. Tardif has taught at the Universities of Kansas and Maryland and at the Peabody Conservatory, and is a colleague of Fritz Gearhart on the faculty of East Carolina University.

“Above us a violinist, below us another...in the last room opposite ours, a hautboyist. Merry conditions for composing! You get so many ideas!” So proclaimed Mozart in a letter to his sister, jokingly, one suspects. A Shakespeare-style investigation into the authenticity of Mozart’s work is hardly necessary! The Sonata in B-Flat Major was composed in Vienna during February 1789, and is primarily a keyboard piece with violin accompaniment. It was most likely written for one of Mozart’s students, and although it sounds relatively simple in comparison to the virtuosity that some of Mozart’s works demand, the Sonata in B-Flat Major is still deceptively difficult to play.

William Grant Still holds the accolade as the first black American to conduct a major orchestra, the first to have a symphony played by a leading orchestra, and the first to have an opera performed by a leading company. As if this were not enough, Still also held Rosenwald and Guggenheim fellowships, the Harmon Award, and a myriad of other prizes. He became interested in composing while at Wilberforce College and at The Oberlin College Conservatory, where his work was interrupted by Navy Service in World War I. The prejudice that he encountered during the war may have provided the inspiration for his first major work, the Afro-American Symphony, premiered in 1931 by the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra. Still owed the discovery of his style partly to the avant-garde nature of his private tutor, Edgard Varèse. However, after a period of experimental work, Still turned to a neo-romantic style, with graceful melodies supported by conventional harmonies and rhythms. Each of the three movements of the Suite for Violin and Piano is inspired by a piece of Afro-American sculpture. The first is suggested by Richmond Barthe’s African Dancer, the second by Sargent Johnson’s...
