The Musician

Joseph Schwartz's long and distinguished career has encompassed solo performance, chamber music, and piano instruction. He captured the attention of the music world by winning the celebrated Walter W. Naumburg Competition and followed soon after with a stunning debut in Town Hall. New York Times music critic Harold C. Schonberg hailed Schwartz's "successful fusion of whiz-bang technique and musicianship" and called him "one of the finest young pianists around." His solo recitals and appearances with orchestras have taken him to concert stages throughout the United States, as well as to Asia, Canada, Europe, and South America. Schwartz recently performed three Beethoven concertos in one marathon concert with the Galveston (Texas) Symphony Orchestra, and his current season includes recitals in Florida, North Carolina, and Virginia.

Schwartz enjoyed a thirty-eight-year tenure as the Robert W. Wheeler Professor of Piano Performance at the Oberlin Conservatory of Music, where he also established the annual Summer Piano Institute and served as its director for twelve years. Since 1991 he has been a member of the Oberlin Piano Trio, which has performed most recently in Armenia, Germany, and the Czech Republic. The trio has recorded CDs of French music and twentieth-century American music.

Schwartz has given master classes at many colleges and universities, including the Hong Kong Conservatory, the Interlochen Arts Academy, the University of Alberta, and the University of Texas at Austin. He and his wife, pianist and teacher Renata Kuh, reside in Clearwater, Florida.
