The Musicians

CAPELLA DE LA TORRE

An ensemble comprised of experts in the field of historical performance practice, Capella de la Torre brings to life the prized musical repertory of the Middle Ages and the Renaissance. The name “de la Torre” can be understood in multiple ways. The ensemble specializes in music for historical woodwind instruments — shawms, dulcians, sackbuts and cornets, known collectively in the sixteenth century as “Capella alta” — and the most famous sixteenth-century piece for such an ensemble, Danza alta, was written by Spanish composer Francisco de la Torre. The name can also refer to the place where this type of music was most often played. “De la torre” means “down from the tower,” and Renaissance wind ensembles usually performed from towers and balconies. Known in Spain as ministriles, wind ensembles were called piffari in Italy and Stadtpfeifer in German-speaking countries. In Renaissance England, they were referred to as waits, sometimes spelled waytes, a term derived from the even more ancient practice of equipping the watchman (wait) with a horn.

Since its founding in 2005, the ensemble has recorded five CDs: Music for Emperor Charles V; Mater Matris Christi — Music from the Annaberg Choir Books; Waits, Piffari, Menestrels; The Guard on the Battlements; and Feliz Navidad — Mediterranean Christmas Music. Its recordings and live performances have been broadcast on all of the regional radio networks in Germany.
KATHARINA BÄUML

Born in Munich, Germany, Katharina Bäuml studied modern oboe in the conservatories of Hannover, Hamburg, and Mannheim. Among her accomplishments on the modern oboe, she has been a soloist in the Gustav Mahler Orchestra and has taught oboe at the School of Music of Hamburg. Expanding her interests to include historical woodwind instruments, she studied with Renate Hildebrand in Hamburg and Katharina Arfken at the Schola Cantorum in Basel. As an early music specialist, she has performed with the Akademie für Alte Musik Berlin, L´Arpa Festante, Barockorchester L´Arco, Dresdner Instrumentalconcert, Les Musiciens du Louvre, Ministries de Marsias, Musica Fiata, and Orquesta Barroca de Sevilla.

In addition to establishing Capella de la Torre in 2005, Bäuml and accordionist Margit Kern founded the ensemble Mixtura, which specializes in contemporary music for shawms and other instruments. Bäuml currently teaches at the music conservatories of Amsterdam and Geneva.

Program Notes

Today’s concert inaugurates the second week of events in the Month of European Culture, which includes twenty-nine concerts in various Washington, DC, venues that represent all twenty-seven countries in the European Union as well as symposia, films, and other events throughout the month of May. Representing the Federal Republic of Germany, Capella de la Torre presents a program of Renaissance music as it might have been heard in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries in the places where Albrecht Dürer lived and worked.
